PREFACE.

THE text adopted in the present volume of the GRAMMAR SCHOOL CLASSICS is that of Merkel's excellent and critical edition (8vo. Berlin, 1841). In a few instances only other readings have been preferred, where he seemed to have departed from the best copies without sufficient reason, or on the other hand to have adhered to them too scrupulously. Founded on a careful collation of a very large number of MSS., including all which are known to exist of any considerable value, Merkel's Fasti is likely to remain the standard for all future editions. The critics of the old school, from whom the vulgate texts of this and some other classical authors have hitherto been taken, almost without question, though generally very learned men, seem to have imperfectly understood what may be called the theory of MSS. When they found one or two, even though of recent date, which furnished readings essentially differing from the rest, they too often preferred them, concluding that these had been transcribed from some independent source, whereas they contained, in all probability, but the conjectural corrections of some ingenious scholar of the middle ages. Merkel has cleared away many serious blemishes of this kind. The most elegant and poetical readings are not necessarily the truest; for the object of correctors was not only to restore, but to improve on the original, and they did not invariably fail in the attempt. This is especially observable in a work which, like the Fasti, never received the finishing hand of the author. But Merkel has done much more than given a good text. He has comprised, in a Preface of about 300 pages, a most laborious treatise on the historical, archaeological, and religious questions connected with Ovid's work. In the compilation of this he has not only ransacked and well-nigh exhausted the vast resources of the ancient authors, but he has embodied the researches of the most distinguished modern philologists, Niebuhr, Müller, Hartung, Clausen, and Bunsen; so that his book, on the whole, leaves little or nothing to be desired. Nevertheless, it is a work adapted only for scholars, and indeed those scholars who are already thoroughly conversant with Roman literature, and intellectually able to grapple with its perplexing difficulties. The very nature of a school-book requires that while all that is abstruse is omitted, much that is elementary should be added. It is not so easy to satisfy these conditions as is commonly supposed: for, on the one hand, there is the risk of leaving some important points unexplained; on the other, that of delaying the intelligent young student by common-place, not to say puerile comments. Such great works as Merkel's are the cyclopaedias rather than the manuals of learning. We thankfully make use of the results, but we must, in cases like the present, generally omit all reference to the numerous sources from which they are deduced.

Besides Merkel's edition, to which this little volume is under such considerable obligations, only two others have been consulted throughout, viz. the excellent one by Gierig (Leipsig, 1812—1814), and that of Mr. Keightley, which is for the most part a compilation from those already mentioned (London, 1848, ed. 2). It was thought that no adequate good would be derived, in a small publication like the present, from the use of a larger number of former editions. It is believed that all necessary information will be found in the notes; but should more be required on particular terms and usages, it will readily be obtained from the standard school-books, the Dictionary of Antiquities, and the Classical Dictionary.

The Fasti of Ovid is undoubtedly one of the most important works which have come down to us. It contains, in the comparatively short space of some five thousand verses,—or rather, did contain, if ever completed¹,—a summary of the religion, the history, and the civil institutions of Rome from its foundation to the death of Augustus. Though at first sight it is generally easy, this is precisely the sort of work where a commentary is really indispensable. A better acquaintance with it will convince the too ambitious student that it is one thing merely to construe the Latin, and quite another to follow the author through the intricacies of ancient history and the obscurities of a mixed mythology. The Fasti may be regarded as a repertory of the old Italian traditions, many of which modern philology has enabled us to distinguish from or compare with the Greek in a more perfect manner and with greater certainty than either the author himself or the contemporary Romans could do. In spite of the now hackneyed assertion, that Roman literature is nothing but a bad copy of the Greek, it may safely be maintained that there is a very large admixture of genuine Italian sentiments, and yet more of genuine Italian mythology, in the Roman poets, which is often indeed disguised, but seldom wholly obscured, by Greek imagery and modes of expression. In the literature of every nation there must of necessity be much which is strictly original; for every nation has a history and heroes of its own, even when neither its laws nor its religious observances are peculiar to it. The Romans borrowed, or rather adapted from the Greeks, because it was the fashion of the age, which they had not the courage, or, it may be, the wish to oppose. They were not so much dependent on them for intellectual resources as willing to accept an excellence they could not hope to surpass. The very appreciation of that excellence shows them to have been a clever people. They had a singular aptitude for receiving the impression of the Greek mind. They felt, and were even perplexed at, the points of resemblance between them; and because they did not repudiate that sort of instinctive sympathy with the products of genius which naturally exists between cognate families of mankind, they are accused of being mere plagiarists. The early immigration of the Pelasgi from the East had introduced an admixture of elements common both to Italy and to Greece. Hence the literature, and habits, and religion of the two countries so easily coalesced. They could no more keep apart than iron remains apart from the magnet; they embraced as naturally as two sisters embrace when they meet. In reading the Roman authors we must ever bear in mind the composite nature of the people, and the various influences by which their national characteristics were affected. Part of these they inherited from the indigenious and independent Italian tribes; part from the German Goths; part they received directly from the Greeks; part was due to the intercourse with Egypt and the various Phenician colonies; while a substratum of theological views had been imported into Magna Graecia by Pythagoras from the ancient Indian philosophy. All these form so many threads which require to be unravelled by a skilful hand before they can be re-combined in the fabric of authentic history.

Had the entire works of Varro, who was contemporary with Cicero, descended to our times, we may infer, from the extent to which both Ovid and Plutarch are indebted to him, that a rich treasure of truly Roman antiquities would have been in our possession. The grammatical treatise which has been in part spared to us, and to which such frequent reference is made in the following pages, De Lingua Latina, is beyond price. It contains abundant proofs, apart from any intention of the author, who attributed as much as he could to the Greeks, that by no means all Roman legends, rites, and practices were of foreign extraction. Indeed, the sooner the student is disenthralled from an erroneous view which the old system of classical education² has tended to encourage, but which detracts so much from the interest of Roman literature, the better. In the Juno, the Minerva, the Venus, the Diana, the Mercury of the Romans, we may at first sight recognize only the Hera, the Pallas, the Aphrodite, the Artemis, the Hermes of the Greeks; and yet they are really very far from being identical: If these gods or their attributes had been borrowed from the Greeks, which assuredly they were not, their names would have been borrowed also. The real truth is, that the ultimate sources from which both of these nations received their mythology were in great measure the same, viz. Asia Minor, Syria, Persia, India, and the more northern Slavonic tribes; but it underwent wholly independent national developments and modifications, in Italy and in Greece, according to its contact with different races. The Greeks however had no Janus, no Anna Perenna, no Vedjovis, no Summa-nus, no Lares, no Carmentis, no Camenae, no Carna, no Consus; not to mention a number of minor divinities which are purely and wholly Italian. The Romans inherited so much from their mysterious neighbours the Etruscans, so much too from the aboriginal Oscans, Umbrians, and Sabines, the connexion of all of whom with the Greek family is at least very indirect, and cannot be positively established³, that a large proportion of what we may call un-Greek elements must have existed in their earlier mythology. There can be no doubt too that it survived in the traditions of the people long after the literature of Rome, so late in its rise and so foreign and imitative in its character, had quite superseded the older and more uncouth ballad-tales. National peculiarities, especially those of religion, are nearly independent of language. They may survive to the latest without material change, and even linger on when their meaning and their origin have been wholly lost. It would be as unfair to argue that nothing truly Italian remained to the Romans because they conceived a fondness for Greek writings and fashions, after the second Punic war, as it would be to infer, from certain French manners and habits imported from Normandy, that the old Celtic and Anglo-Saxon traditions had utterly perished from England⁴.

It was to these national, and not yet wholly obsolete customs and traditions, that Ovid applied himself, though rather in a Grecising than a national spirit, as Varro and other Roman antiquaries had done before him, and as many did after him, among whom the names of Festus, Nonius, Macrobius, Aulus Gellius, and Servius are conspicuous. Those customs carry us back to the primitive pastoral worship, and the simple life of the wild mountaineers of Italy, certainly before the colonies of

Magna Graecia were established, probably even before the foundation of Rome, if not before the arrival of the Pelasgic hordes; of which kind are the festivals of the Lupercalia, the Palilia, the Ambarvalia, the Terminalia, all remarkable for a simplicity and a rudeness, which may be called almost barbarous if not savage⁵. And those traditions are such as, whatever be their real worth, derive at least a show of credibility from the fact that the majority of them were generally received, and consistently held by the historians of Rome of every age⁶.

It will of course be urged, that the legends recorded by Ovid in explanation of the various rites and festivals are either pure inventions, or totally devoid of authority as traditions. To which we may reply, that it is very easy to carry our distrust of tradition too far. Tradition does not always lie, even in very minute matters. A thoughtful person will have little difficulty in making out some plausible truth even from the wildest and most ancient legends⁷. These, however, are matters of little importance; but not so the early history of Rome. A recent writer has outstripped most followers of the new school in his incredulity, and has insinuated that Romulus and Remus are mythological personages of the same class with Perseus and Ixion⁸. There is a common, though very evident fallacy in regarding these alleged events as too remote from the present time to be worthy of any consideration. Their real value must of course be tested by their date before the earliest written records,—not those records which now remain, but those which the writers we still possess had access to. Now as no one

⁸ Macaulay, Preface to Lays of Ancient Rome.

would assert that traditions relating to our Edwards or our later Henrys were too remote to be worthy of any credit, much less that the personages were mythological; so neither ought we to contend that, because some inconsistencies may be detected in them, the legends of regal Rome must have been so falsified in the times of the Punic wars as to have become little better than so many fables in the hands of the annalists of that time. To reassert the strict truth of these old tales would indeed be simply to retrograde in scholarship. But there should be some limit to our modern habit of calling every thing in question. Niebuhr himself⁹ was scarcely as incredulous as some of his followers. Indeed, the founders of a new school are pretty sure to be surpassed by their disciples in the further development of their doctrines. Mr. Macaulay's argument is this:—"It is certain that more than 360 years after the date ordinarily assigned for the foundation of the city, the public records were, with scarcely an exception, destroyed by the Gauls. It is certain that the oldest annals of the commonwealth were compiled more than a century and a half after this destruction of the records. It is certain, therefore, that the great Latin writers of the Augustan age did not possess those materials, without which a trustworthy account of the infancy of the republic could not possibly be framed¹." Without stopping to inquire how far any one of these points can be called certain, or whether there really were at that time any written documents in the shape of regular annals, to destroy ; we venture to affirm, that the history of Rome, such as it then was, received no damage whatever from the invasion of the barbarians. They could not control men's memories ; they could not silence old national songs ; they could not make unavailing any one of the many ways in which facts are handed down independently of pen and paper². We are apt to judge of tradition somewhat unfairly, when we weigh it in the balance against co-existing documentary evidence. For wherever documents are known to have been preserved, there is a tendency in tradition to become inactive and obsolete, or at least greatly corrupted and relaxed, from a consciousness that it is no longer the exclusive keeper of a precious national deposit. So far, therefore, is it from the truth, that traditions are less faithfully held in a rude and unlettered age, than in a highly cultivated one, that the very contrary seems generally to have been the case. Where no written records exist, facts may undoubtedly be preserved with considerable accuracy for centuries. The chief liability to err is in dates, and in a certain tendency to exaggerate or disparage events according to national sympathies or party prejudices. In either case, the one tendency counteracts the other ; so that what may be called the mean truth, can generally be ascertained with tolerable certainty. The same may be said of the origin of local customs, which, as already remarked, are singularly enduring in their nature. They are kept up with a jealous tenacity amongst the unlearned inhabitants of a country long after an alien civilization has expelled them from the metropolis ; for national pride and prejudice exert not their least influence on unlettered minds, and make them stubbornly averse to change³. Rome was undoubtedly extensively Grecised under the Empire ; its literature almost wholly so: its social habits not much less:—

‘ Non possum ferre, Quirites, Graecam urbem,’

was the exclamation of a writer who partook largely of this national prejudice, and who feared not to express his disgust and contempt at what he considered, perhaps justly, a degeneracy. The reader of Martial finds both Greek terms and Greek habits impressed on every page.

Now Ovid, and Varro, and the other antiquaries of the same school⁴, in their endeavours to ascertain the origin of the old Roman festivals and popular superstitions, had this difficulty to contend with, that they could not disconnect them, however ancient, from the idea of a Greek prototype. They viewed every thing, if we may be allowed the expression, through Greek spectacles. They did not understand the precise relation which the Greeks and Romans, considered as a family of mankind, bore to each other; and consequently, when some real or fancied resemblance presented itself, either in the terms or the rites of religion, they readily acquiesced in the fiction that Evander or Hercules imported them from Greece into Italy⁵. This was to them a source of endless confusion and inconsistency. They rescued from oblivion the rags and tatters of the old national costume, but they altered their character by sewing them on to Greek dresses. It was reserved for modern philology to assort and restore the scanty remnants to their proper places. We can now trace back, almost step by step, to the confines of India, and even to India itself⁶, a very considerable portion both of the religion and the philosophy of ancient Greece and Rome. We can follow the migration of the Pelasgic hordes from the confines of that land which first witnessed the growth and spread of the human race⁷; and we can therefore recognize, without undue astonishment, not a few traditions which are essentially identical with the Mosaic account. Such are the Deluge, in the well-known fable of Pyrrha and Deucalion; the creation of the first man out of clay by Prometheus; the formation of the world out of Chaos; the war with the giants, which represents either the disobedience of Adam, or the rebellion of the Angels; the frequent and remarkable allusions to serpent-worship, which clearly point to the Fall; the legends of the Golden age, which seem to be a dim record of the life in Eden, to which also the 'Hyperborean happiness'⁸ may possibly refer; the final destruction of the world by fire⁹, besides many doctrines more or less coincident with Scripture, which must be regarded either as universal instincts, or remnants of a primeval revelation to man¹.

Greece and Rome may be regarded as the medium through which, in the designs of Providence, a flood of eastern civilization was destined to overspread the otherwise barbarous west. The general tendency of progress, both political and intellectual, in the human race, has ever been in the direction from east to west; China and India are the oldest², as America is the most recent, of highly organized communities, industrious at once in arts, sciences, and literature. But the influence of Rome, as the centre and source of all European civilization, though comparatively late, has been more permanent, if not more extensive, than that of any kingdom in the world's history. It has actively prevailed for little less than two thousand years, and has never yet ceased, though the essentially eastern characteristics of Pelasgic Rome have long passed away. In truth it is not easy to contemplate, even in imagination, a people walking about in sandals and white blankets, living in houses which retained, amidst all their incomparable splendour and luxury, the primitive eastern arrangement of a central fireplace, and a hole in the roof above it; reclining, like Turks or Arabs, on cushions at their meals, burning their dead like Hindus, and with all the idol accessories, both in their homes and their temples, to say nothing of the impure rites, which still mark the pantheism of the unchanging east. These features no longer remain; yet it is not too much to say that three parts of Europe are to this day essentially, if unconsciously, Roman in habits, sentiments, laws, language, traditions and usages. Few, indeed, but those who have thought on the subject, can form any idea what a large proportion of all that we daily see and use is simply Roman, not only in its origin, but almost in its present form. We wear mourning³, we sprinkle dust on the coffins of our friends⁴, our poets talk of their 'ashes,' and our sculptors commemorate them by cinerary urns. We use bride-cake⁵ at weddings; we give gifts, and add good wishes on New-year's day⁶; we celebrate birth-days; we use the names of the months from January to December unchanged; we dress our statues in Roman attire; we impress the Palatine bay and oak⁷ on our coins; we place Homer (Humboldt, Cosmos, vol. ii. notes 60 and 62), and China has 'a history and regular chronology which go back to 2400 or even to 2700 before our era.' (Ibid. note, 146.)

⁷ See Varronianus, p. 56, ed. 2. We cannot tell how ancient or how extensive was the polytheism of Greece and Rome, nor how much of it was derived from, or common to, those earliest centres of civilization, China, India, Assyria, and Egypt. The same may truly be said of science, philosophy, and art. But to suppose that any of these was created by the Greeks themselves is to take a somewhat narrow view.

afflicted persons in abodes named after the 'Asylum' of Romulus; and we call our 'money' after the temple of Juno Moneta. We still keep the ancient feast of the Floralia in our May-day revelries; the Ambarvalia in 'beating the Parish bounds;' and we still retain orders of Knighthood, borrowed from the Equites of the old Republic⁸. Similar coincidences might be traced in almost every department of public and private life; and yet England is far less Roman than many other European states. Agricultural operations in many countries have remained wholly unchanged.

Herein, without doubt, lies the immense importance of the Latin language and the Roman literature considered in an educational point of view. It is not merely useful as a discipline, or because it facilitates the learning and the correct grammatical apprehension of so many closely allied modern dialects, though it is invaluable in these respects also. It is the key-stone to the whole fabric, social and political, of the western world. Hence it is that most great statesmen have been good, if not great, classical scholars. Throughout the middle ages, and long after the dissolution of the Empire, Rome retained its hold on the habits and the actions of the western world. This was no doubt in great measure due to its position with respect to Christianity; but not less to its ancient prestige as mistress of mankind. A living writer⁹ has well remarked, in reference to the immense debt of gratitude which Europe owes to ancient Greece and Rome, 'If all that we have gained from the shores of the Mediterranean were erased from the memory of man, we should be savages.' Not less true are the words of a deceased author¹:—'This is, indeed, the peculiar magnificence of the subject, that the history of Rome must be in some sort the history of the world. No nation, no language, no country of the ancient world can altogether escape our researches, if we follow on steadily the progress of the Roman dominion till it reached its greatest extent.'

FASTORUM

LIBER I.

Tempora cum causis Latium digesta per annum,
Lapsaque sub terras orta que signa canam.
Excipe pacato, Caesar Germanice, vultu
Hoc opus, et timidæ dirige navis iter;

1. Tempora] Under this general term the poet includes not only the months and their divisions, but the different kinds of days, festivals, half-holidays, and those for ordinary business. Causae are the reasons or grounds on which the distinctions were established. It is probable that the word has reference to the Αἴτια of Callimachus, a lost epic poem, explanatory of the ancient Greek legends, whence Propertius avowedly borrowed the idea which Ovid has more fully developed in his Fasti. The last book of Propertius, containing some portions of a metrical history of Rome, is clearly the model on which our poet composed the present work. In Prop. v. (iv.) 10. 1, we have 'nunc Jovis incipiam causas aperire Feretri.'—signa. This implies that astronomical observations will be interwoven with the historical narratives (inf. 295), so that the work may be at once useful and amusing. This part of the poet's information, which is occasionally inaccurate, was derived from a contemporary grammarian and friend, Clodius Tuscus. He is mentioned as Tuscus in Epist. ex Pont. iv. 16. 20; and an account of his treatise on the risings and settings of the stars, a Greek translation of which was first published in 1823, is given by Merkel, Praef. p. lxvi. seqq. A specimen of a practical Roman calendar for the whole year, compiled from authentic data, will be found in the 'Dictionary of Antiquities,' p. 183. The Fasti of Ovid embodies the notices of festivals, &c., in precisely the same way, but enlarges on the circumstances, so as to verify the opening words tempora cum causis. The Fasti themselves, as corrected by Augustus, and used by Ovid in his work, have fortunately been discovered, and are printed by Merkel, under the title of 'Tabula Maffæana.' For an account of this and other ancient marbles, inscribed with calendars in a more or less perfect condition, the student should consult the Dict. of Antiq. in v. Fasti; and he should also carefully peruse, as an introduction to the present poem, the able articles on the Calendar, Feriae, and Nundinae, in the same work.

3. Caesar Germanice,] This was the son of Drusus, and the adopted son of Tiberius, who is called pater in ver. 10, as Augustus is avus, Tiberius being step-son of the latter, and adopted by him. His history forms a prominent part in the early books of the Annals of Tacitus. The first twenty-six verses are a formal dedication of the poem to Germanicus, and must be regarded as a postscript, with the exception, as Merkel thinks (praefat. p. cclxvi.), of ver. 1, 2, 7, 8, 13, 14, which perhaps formed the original proem, written between the years 753—755. The object of the new dedication, which was made shortly after the death of Augustus in 767 (see inf. 63), was probably to induce Tiberius, on the intercession of Germanicus, to recal the poet from his exile. We know from Trist. ii. 551, that the work was at first inscribed to Augustus :—

‘ Idque tuo nuper scriptum sub nomine, Caesar,
Et tibi sacratum sors mea rupit
opus.’

It was therefore laid aside unfinished at the time of his banishment in 762, though he seems to have completed the first draught or outline of the twelve books. See on vi. 812. Afterwards he resumed it, intending a revision; but he only lived to remodel the first book. He died, it is thought, at the close of the year 770. Merkel has treated the question of the cura prima et secunda with great care and at considerable length, and concludes that in all but the first book Augustus and not Tiberius is alluded to; in a word, that with the exception of four verses inserted in iv. 81—84, they were not touched by the author after 762, A.U.C.

6. numine dexter ades.] A mere metrical expression for fave or annue. Officium is properly the personal service of a client to his patron, as in attending him in public: hence ‘a compliment’ of any kind. Some MSS. and edd. give officii, and in tibi devoto munere.

7. recognosces] Germanicus, as a literary man, is presumed to be already acquainted with the facts which are now presented, as it were, in a new dress. The prisci annales probably refer not only to the writings of Ennius and Fabius Pictor, but to the yearly state records or chronicles properly so called, and to the books of the Pontifices, indigitamenta, containing lists of the gods, and instructions as to their worship. To such records eruta is obviously applicable, as they were not likely to be generally known, or even generally accessible.

9. domestica vobis ;] ‘Instituted by or in honour of your own gens, the Julian (by adoption). Those days are especially meant in which the name of Augustus occurred in the calendar, i.e. feriae in commemoration of his exploits. Hor. Od. iv. 14. 4.

11. signantia] Like notata, ver. 8, this refers to the marks made in the Fasti against holidays. See on iii. 429. — pictos. They were distinguished by red letters, a custom which has been continued through the MSS. of the middle ages almost to the present day, as in the instance of ‘rubrics’ from rubrica. Juvenal has ‘rubrae majorum leges,’ xiv. 191; and Martial twice uses the term ‘purpurei fasti,’ xi. 4. 5, and xii. 26. 5. The Drusus here mentioned was the son of Tiberius.— feres means that hereafter they will obtain the same honours (praemia) in the Roman Calendar which their seniors have already secured.—ferre is not unfrequently used for consequi.

13. aras] 'Templa aedificata et restaurata,' e. g. that of the Palatine Apollo. See Sueton. Oct. § 29. Infra ii. 63.

19. movetur] This is usually explained 'commovetur,' 'tremit.' But the ellipse of metu, to be supplied from ver. 16, is harsh, and unlike the generally easy style of Ovid. Rather, it is put forth, 'emittitur.' Inf. iii. 11, 'quid enim vetat inde moveri?' l. e. carmen; iv. 820, 'inde movetur opus.' Her. xvi. 78, 'hanc esse ut exires, unde movetur amor.' Virg. Aen. vii. 641, 'pandite nunc Heliconae deae cantusque movete.' The fulsome adulation of comparing Germanicus to Apollo need not surprise any one acquainted with the poetry of the Augustan age.

21. sensimus] 'We (the Romans generally) are well aware.' Keightley limits the sense too closely: 'I have heard of,' as Ovid was in exile.—pro trepidis reis. The Romans had a feeling, in which we do not now share, that nothing was more honourable than to devote time and talents to the defence of culprits. Gierig compares Hor. Od. ii. 1. 13, where Pollio is called 'insigne maestis praesidium reis.' Like the Greeks, they were very soft-hearted in this matter; but it arose from the unjust accusations, calumniæ or συκοφανταί, so often brought by the powerful against the weak and defenceless, and was a natural result of the jealousies between plebs and populus.

23. ad nostras artes.] Poetry as distinct from eloquence. Sueton. Calig. § 3, 'Omnes Germanico corporis animique virtutes, et quantas nemini cuiquam, contigisse satis constat: formam et fortitudinem egregiam, ingenium in utroque eloquentiae doctrinaeque genere praecellens. —Oravit causas etiam triumphalis; atque inter cetera studiorum monumenta reliquit et comoedias Graecas.' In Epist. ex Pont. ii. 5. 49—56, Ovid speaks of Germanicus's eloquence in exaggerated terms:

'Mox ubi pulsa mora est, atque os coeleste solutum,
Hoc Superos jures more solere
loqui,' &c.

Tacitus, who is more to be relied on, merely says, Ann. ii. 73, 'Clementia, temperantia, ceteris bonis artibus praestitit.' He translated the Phaenomena of Aratus, parts of which version are still extant.

25.] Of the two readings of this

Auspicio felix totus ut annus eat.
 Tempora digereret cum conditor urbis, in anno Constituit menses quinque bis esse suo.
 Scilicet arma magis quam sidera, Romule, noras,
 Curaque finitimos vincere major erat. 30
 Est tamen et ratio, Caesar, quae moverit illum, passage, 'scilicet ut fas est,' and 'si licet et fas est,' the latter seems to give the better sense. The poet apologises for preferring a request which he pretends to fear may be thought derogatory to so high a dignity. We may perhaps understand it thus: 'Si licet mihi rogare, et si fas est tibi concedere roganti.' Fas is used with reference to the numen of Germanicus. The former reading is preferred by Merkel. Keightley says, 'scilicet, therefore. The use of scilicet in this sense is very rare.' Nothing but undoubted examples would make such a sense credible.

26. auspicio] Another reading is auspice te. There is a sort of play on felix annus eat, which in fact is meant to refer to the poem only; but the success and prosperity of the current year are also implied. See inf. 168, where auspicium is 'the opening day.' Here he only means the patronage of Germanicus. On the question of his consulship see inf. 63.

27.] Whatever opinions may exist on the old cyclic or ten-month Roman year, it is an acknowledged fiction to attribute it to Romulus. See inf. iii. 75. It seems to have been adopted either from the people of Alba or Etruria, and may even have co-existed, as a sacred division of time, with a civil year of twelve months; or there may have been a want of uniformity resulting from the mixed nature of the early Roman population. It is difficult to explain the numerical terms which we still employ, viz. September to December, except on the theory that, like the Greek Prytanies, there were in actual use ten divisions of the year.

Instances have been adduced of treaties which seem to have been reckoned by ten-month years, such years amounting to 304 days each. But in the case of the Veientian treaty, made with Rome in 280 for forty years, and either concluded or broken in 317, Dr. Arnold (Hist. of Rome, i. p. 384) inclines to the latter view against Niebuhr, who maintains that the years were cyclic years of ten months; so that this instance proves nothing. See also ibid. p. 388. One thing at least seems certain, that the year must always be regulated by, or more or less accurately adjusted to, the recurrence of certain seasons, so as to be of the same length into whatever parts it is arbitrarily divided. Hence ten lunar months could not possibly constitute a year in themselves. If they were made up by intercalating, it seems likely enough that the intercalated days afterwards became two new months with regular names like the rest, January taking the precedence of all, because Janus was the god of opening (ii. 51). See inf. on iii. 121, and the Dictionary of Antiquities, art. Calendar, where this intricate subject is fully discussed.

31. quae moverit] Keightley says that this and the following tueatur are potential. He means, perhaps, to translate, 'there is a reason which may have moved him.' Moverit belongs in fact to the idiom 'est qui faciat, sunt qui dicant, &c., the only difference being that the action here is one of mixed time, 'there are reasons which moved him,' for 'habuit rationes quibus moveretur;' while in the next verse it changes to the 'praesens historicum.'

37. haec vidit,] ‘Haec respexit,’
 ‘non putavit negligenda.’—trabeati.
 The origin of the striped toga so called was traditionally assigned to Romulus, who was said to have appeared in it when taken up to heaven. See ii. 503; vi. 375.—
annua jura bears an unusual sense, which however is determined by the context, ‘leges ad anni tempora pertinentes.’—jura dare is properly ‘to legislate;’ jus dare ‘to decide causes.’ Inf. 207. 252.

 from Aeneas through Ilia or Silvia (iv. 55), he referred his origin to Venus as the author of his race, but to Mars directly as his father.

 by februa. See on ii. 19. 49. 533.

45—49. ne ignores—neu putaris;]
 ‘But, that you (the reader) may not be ignorant,—nor suppose,’ &c., (you are to observe that,) &c. Keightley is surely wrong here: ‘Do not then be ignorant, for,’ &c., adding, ‘tamen is merely emphatic, like the Italian pure.’ The word is sometimes used elliptically, and requires something to be supplied before it; but there is no reason to doubt that it always bears its proper meaning. See inf.

 447. 495.—jura means the lawfulness of doing this or that on particular days.—idem officii is like ‘soporis idem,’ ii. 334, ‘turbae

 logy of nihil, multum, parum, &c.—
 On variorum see inf. 132.

47. tria verba] The technical words do, dico, addico used by the Praetor, viz. ‘do bonorum posses-sionem, dico jus, addico id de quo ambigitur.’ Those days on which the Praetor could sit for the transaction of ordinary business at the usual time were fasti, those on which there was no session were nefasti. The words are from fus and fari, which have a common root, found also in φημί. Varro, de Ling. Lat. vi. §

Vindicat Ausonias Junonis cura Kalendas ; 55

Idivus alba Jovi grandior agna cadit ;

torem : do, dico, addico ; itaque non potest agi ; necesse enim aliquo eorum uti verbo, cum lege quid peragitur.' The Romans seem to have kept their feriae or holidays strictly ; and as usual when holidays accumulate, they greatly interfered with business, so that Augustus found it necessary to curtail them. Suet. Oct. § 32. Virgil speaks of certain works being lawfully done on festivals, Georg. i. 268, in terms which justify the conclusion that they were generally observed as strictly as our Sundays.

50.] He speaks of half-holidays, nefasti parte, or nefasti priores, in which only the morning was exempted from legal duties. There were also dies intercisi, which it is hard to reconcile with the statement in 51, 52. In these, according to Varro, L. L. vi. § 31, there was a legal interval of some hours between killing the victim and offering the exta : 'intercisi dies sunt per quos mane et vesperi est nefas, medio tempore inter hostiam caesam et exta porrecta fas.' See also ib. § 16, 'inter quojus exta caesa et porrecta Flamen primus vinum legit.' But Ovid says what is clearly different, 'in the afternoon, after the exta have been offered, business may proceed as usual.' Either then he omits all mention of the intercisi, or, if he thought they were the same as nefasti parte, which is not improbable, he omits to state that business must stop at sunset ; perhaps because such was generally the custom on all days. Ovid was indebted to Varro for much of his information, and it is difficult to believe that the discrepancy arose from ignorance. Merkel (p. xxxvii.) denies that dies nefasti parte and intercisi were the same. The former are marked in the old calendars NP. ; the latter EN (endo for in) which fact alone seems to indicate a distinction.

53. septis ;] He now speaks of the dies comitiales, or regular days for holding assemblies of the people. These were not only fasti, fit for legal business, but for all ordinary duties whatever ; whereas nefasti dies precluded only legal, but admitted of other affairs being done, either public or private (Merkel, p. xxxiii.). The septa were the inclosures (temporary?) in the Campus Martius for the voting of the centuries. It appears that similar septa, for the Comititia Curiata, occupied a part of the forum, which was famed for its fine shops (Martial, ix. 60 ; x. 80. 4).

54. nono ab orbe] The nundinae, or market-days ; so called, like the nonae of the month, which always fell eight days before the ides, from the principle of inclusive counting familiar to the Romans. To prevent the coincidence of nonae and nundinae, which they thought unlucky, a day was interpolated in some years. They seem also to have avoided beginning a new year with this day. In the old calendars, the letters of the alphabet from A to H inclusive are prefixed to the days of the month, some one of which was the nundine letter for the whole year.

55. Kalendas ;] The goddess Juno, who in her Pelasgic character was Nonarum tutela deo caret. Omnibus istis,

Ne fallare cave, proximus Ater erit.

Omen ab eventu est; illis nam Roma diebus

Damna sub adverso tristia Marte tulit.

Haec mihi dicta semel totis haerentia fastis,

Ne seriem rerum scindere cogar, erunt.

sometimes the earth, sometimes the moon, claimed as her own the first day of every month (νομηνία), on which a sacrifice was offered to her by one of the subordinate pontiffs. On the ides Jupiter was similarly honoured; while the nonas, being less important than either the new or the full moon, were not dedicated to any particular deity. The meaning of these terms may be given in Varro's words, L. L. vi. § 27: 'primi dies mensium nominati Calendae ab eo quod his diebus calantur [i. e. καλοῦνται] ejus mensis nonae a pontificibus, quintanae an septimanae sint futuræ [i. e. fall on the 5th or the 7th], in Capitolio in Curia Calabra sic: dies te quinque calo, Juno Covella [i. e. luna cava, κοίλη], septem dies te calo, Juno Covella. Nonae appellatae aut quod ante diem nonum ides semper, aut quod ut novus annus calendae Januariae ab novo sole appellatae, novus mensis ab nova luna.' The former is evidently right. Idus is from an old verb iduo (whence divido), because it fell on the middle of the month. Others however derived it ἀπὸ τῆς εἰδοῦς, from the full moon. The Roman way of counting days prospectively is nothing more than our expression, 'it wants so many days to the full moon,' or, 'to the holidays,' or 'so many miles to London.'

58. Ater] The day after the kalends, nones, and ides in every month was more than nefastus, it was religiosus, or 'unlucky,' and allowed of no public or state business of any sort. Hence the poet adds ne fallare cave, mind you do not forget the precept or miss the count. Varro, L. L. vi. § 29, 'dies postridie Ca-

lendas, Nonas, Idus, appellati atri quod per eos dies novi inciperent.' Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 25, inquires why these three days in each month were ἀνέξοδοι καὶ ἀνεκδήμητοι (unfit for expeditions), and after assigning the above as a probable reason, concludes that they were regarded as sacred to the dead and the powers called δαίμονες (genii, ii. 545), like the second month after the commencement of the year. He also suggests that they wished to leave the interval of a whole day unemployed between a holiday and the resumption of ordinary business. The day after the kalends and nones was kept sacred, as Keightley remarks, on the analogy of the unlucky ides. The 'dies Alliensis,' or defeat by the Gauls at the Allia, July 16th, 390 B.C., is mentioned by Varro, vi. § 32. Compare Ibis, 221, 'haec est in fastis cui dat gravis Allia nomen.' The belief in 'black days' is very ancient. Both Hesiod and Virgil treat of them; and like many other ancient superstitions, it remains to this day in the reluctance which sailors have to commence a voyage on a Friday. A difficulty arises from the fact that in the ancient calendars these days are generally marked F (fasti); which Merkel (p. xxxiii.) removes, or endeavours to remove, by the supposition that the rule was relaxed by Augustus, or that they were publice religiosi, i. e. unlucky for public business, though only marked as unfit for meetings of the Senate and Comitia, which did not take place on dies fasti.

62. erunt] This refers to haerentia. The sense is, 'these remarks by way of preface, made once for all, will be understood to apply to all the months alike.' He proceeds accordingly with the series rerum, an account of the festivals in their order.

63. nuntiat annum.] Keightley thinks this was the year of his consulship 770 (771); but the dedication seems to have been made when Germanicus was going into the East in 770. His second consulship was entered when on that expedition, Tac. Ann. ii. 53. The poet would probably have been more definite in his allusions had Germanicus then been more than consul designatus: the point however seems not clearly determined. To the question, Who was Janus? it may be replied, that primarily and in his simplest attributes he was the sun, as Diana, or Jana, was the moon. Keightley says, 'a curious but accidental resemblance has been traced between him and the Hindoo Ganesa.' We may safely affirm that, whatever resemblance there may be, it is not accidental. The Pelasgi came from the confines of India, and brought with them a mixture of Persian and Hindoo customs, among which that of sun-worship was conspicuous. See inf. 385; iv. 777. Now Plutarch, Quaest. Rom., § 22, states that Janus τῶ μὲν γένει Ἑλληνικῆ Περραιβίας ἦν, and Æschylus, Suppl. 252, includes the Perrhaebi in the Pelasgian district. If Janus then was the sun, the whole passage which follows becomes at once intelligible; which it certainly is not if we regard him as 'an ancient king of Italy.' He is anni origo; he was produced out of chaos (inf. 103); he opens and shuts the world by the alternations of his light, and governs the whole universe (118—120). He is united with the seasons in presiding over heaven (125), and his double face evidently arose from the notion that as the sun passed from east to west he showed his disc both behind and before at the same time, thus contemplating 'eoas partes hesperiasque simul' (140). Yet it does not appear that the poet was at all aware of his true character as the sun-god. All that he says about opening the year and the sky is in reference to janua. In fact, as in the similar case of Anna Perenna, the moon, iii. 523, we must conclude that as the relations between the numerous deities became more complex and their attributes enlarged, the original and simple meaning of the names was not only obscured, but often wholly lost.

67. ducibus.] Tiberius and Germanicus. Dux is not unfrequently used for imperator, i. e. princeps, inf. iv. 408. Here it refers more especially to the victory gained by the latter over the Germans in 769. See Tac. Ann. ii. 41; inf. 285.—otia agit, as agere vitam, ævum, ferias, &c., and even ver agere, Georg. ii. 338. Cf. iv. 926.

70. nutu tuo.] Janus bore a key as a symbol (ver. 99), whence resera, to which is added the notion of favour and good will. Candida probably alludes to the white togas of the people keeping holiday.

74, 'terque lavet nostras spica Cilissa comas.' Inf. v. 318. Ibis, 202, 'quotve ferat, dicam, terra Cilissa crocos.' Saffron is meant, or the dried pistils of crocus sativus, imported from Corycus in Cilicia. When burnt on hot embers it makes a crackling noise, which was considered a good omen. Tibull. ii. 5, 81, 'laurus, io, bona signa dedit: gaudete coloni.' Inf. 344; iv. 742.

79. intactis] 'Clean,' newly scoured, and unstained by use since they left the hands of the fuller. So 'lilium non tactum,' Martial, v. 37. 6. Vestis is more commonly used of the tunic than the toga. See on vi. 623. New togas may also be meant; for these were frequently required in the city, though not in the country, where they were seldom worn. Martial, x. 96. 11:—

'Quatuor hic aestate togae pluresve teruntur:
Auctumnis ibi me quatuor una tegit,'

i. e. in Spain.—Tarpeias arces, the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus.—festo concolor. Dies atris (58) were contrasted with dies candidi. They marked lucky days by a white score, or by setting-by a white pebble as a memento. Martial, xi. 36. 1: 'Gaius hanc lucem gemma mihi Julius alba Signat.' Ibid. xii. 34. 5—8. Persius, v. 108, 'illa prius creta, mox haec carbone notasti.'

81. jamque, &c.] 'And now the procession is in sight, attending the new consul who is to be inaugurated this day.' The nova purpura is the trabea (37), worn by the consuls on solemn occasions, Virg. Aen. vii. 612.—ebur, 'sella curulis.' Virgil combines these two as badges of sovereignty in the speech of king Latinus, Aen. xi. 334, 'et sellam regni trabeamque insignia nostri.' In the consul it denoted the prerogative authority.

83. praebent ferienda] 'Lend their necks to the blow.' For the restiveness of a victim at the altar was a bad omen. Tac. Hist. iii. 56, 'accessit dirum omen, profugus altaribus taurus, disjecto sacrificii apparatu, longe nec ubi feriri hostias mos est confossus.'—herba Falisca. The district of Falerii, near the Clitumnus, was famed for a variety of white oxen. The Romans had a foolish notion that cattle and sheep changed their colour by drinking certain waters, Juven. xii. 13 and 42. This pentameter occurs also in Amor. iii. 13, 14, and ex Pont. iv.

4. 32. Most of the Roman poets occasionally repeat verses, either accidentally or after the example of Homer.

85, 86.] This distich has no direct connection with what precedes. It is added to express the grandeur and majesty of the spectacle.

89. Quem dicam,] This question has been answered on 53. The mention of Greece shows how completely the old Italian mythology had become identified with the Greek. 'Tell us who you are, for we find nothing like you in Greece.' The fact, that the Greeks had no counterpart to Janus, is remarkable, and the more so as the worship seems to have been Pelasgic.

93. agitarẽm mente] He asked the question mentally as he had his book in hand in the act of writing; not that he went prepared to take down viva voce notes.—Lucidior. A supernatural light was believed to attest the presence of a deity. Gierig refers to Aen. ii. 590, 'pura per noctem in luce refusit Alma parens, confessa deam.'

96. repens] Virgil has 'repens discordia' for repentina. The more common form is the ablative repente. Compare sponde from spons (Varro-nianus, p. 314), i. e. expons. It is said to be the participle of ῥέπω, meaning that which falls suddenly.

100. ore priore] 'His front mouth,' i. e. *mih*i obverso.

101. dierum,] The genitive depends on vates rather than on operose. The phrase occurs again iii. 177.

103. vocabant Chaos.] The name Janus was thought by some to be connected with χαίρειν, 'to yawn.' It has been suggested by the present editor (Praef. ad Prom. Vinct. p. xx.) that it comes from λαίρειν, 'to warm,' 'to cheer.'

Lucidus hic aër et quae tria corpora restant, 105
 Ignis, aquae, tellus, unus acervus erant.
 Ut semel haec rerum secessit lite suarum,
 Inque novas abiit massa soluta domos,
 Altum flamma petit ; propior locus aëra cepit ;

 Tunc ego, qui fueram globus et sine imagine moles,
 In faciem redii dignaque membra deo.

105. restant,] ‘Remain to complete the number of four elements.’ By ignis the bright ether is meant, which is always to be distinguished from aër, the atmosphere. Lucret. v. 498, ‘inde mare, inde aër, inde aether ignifer ipse.’ Hence in 109, ‘altum flamma petit.’ Humboldt, Cosmos, vol. iii. p. 34: ‘As the elements of the ancients signify not so much diversity, or even simplicity or indecomposibility of substance, as states of matter, the idea of the upper ether (the fiery celestial atmosphere) had its root in the first and normal antitheses of “heavy” and “light,” “under” and “upper,” “earth” and “fire.” Between these two extremes are two “middle elementary states ;” water, more nearly akin to the heavy earth; and air, nearer to the light fire.’ By this doctrine the meaning of ‘propior locus,’ sc. flammae, ‘aëra cepit,’ is made clear. Lucret. v. 458 :

‘ideo per rara foramina terrae
 Partibus erumpens primus se sustulit aether
 Ignifer, et multos secum levis abstulit ignes.’

Hence the notion of Prometheus bringing fire from heaven. The ether was the vast and inexhaustible magazine of that commodity, so essential to the life of man.

108. massa] This word, from μάζα, a lump of dough, implies something of which the component parts are so thoroughly amalgamated that separation is no longer possible. It is often used of hot iron (μύδρος), and Virgil has ‘atrae massam picis,’ Georg. i. 275. It is well applied to the chaotic mass while its parts, though separable, were intimately blended.

110. terra fretumque] Whatever is meant by the obscure expression in the Mosaic account of the creation, ‘the waters were above the firmament,’ we are struck by its resemblance to the views of cosmogony here given, principally, perhaps, from the Ionic philosophy. The solid earth settled down lowest, then the sea ; while the lighter elements remained aloft,—like strata of sediment from muddy water containing particles of different gravity.

112. redii] ‘i. q. ivi. Compounds in re are frequently used for the simples.’ Keightley. A more satisfactory view is that of Mr. Long on Caesar, B. G. iii. 17 : ‘revocare is not only to “recall,” or “withdraw from a thing,” but to “draw a man into a new or fresh direction,” to a thing which is not his usual or proper object.’ See the note on vi. 535, infra.—It has been already remarked (63) that Janus is the Sun-god. We here find him identified with the earth, or rather universe, under his attribute of Opener or Originator of created things. He associates his own figure with that of the earth in rather a confused way. But the principle is the same as that by which Juno was both Moon and Earth (supra 55). We must not forget that the ancients regarded the earth as the great centre of all things, and the sun as quite secondary in importance. See Virg. Ecl. vi. 31—38.

114.] 'quod est ante et quod est post idem in me videtur.' 'His front and back were the same, as all had been when he was Chaos.' Keightley.

115. causa altera] This is given in ver. 135. In the meantime he explains his office of Janitor in heaven and earth.—ut noris, ut noscas. This tense is necessarily employed for the present subjunctive in defective verbs like novi, memini, &c., and Keightley is wrong in translating 'so that you will know.' So in Juven. vii. 231, the parent is said to exact from the teacher, 'ut legat historias, auctores noverit omnes.'

121. Cum libuit] This by way of an example of his power. 'He represents his temple as being the abode of Peace and War, who dwelt in it alternately. It is shut, to keep War confined; but when it is open, and War is at liberty, Peace remains within.' Keightley. Hor. Epist. ii. 1. 255, 'Claustraque custodem pacis cohibentia Janum.' Inf. 281. The splendid lines of Virgil, Aen. vii. 601—614, should be read along with the present passage. See inf. 257.—perpetuus, like continuus, is used indiscriminately of time, and place or position, and properly means what is uninterrupted by intervals (per and peto). Neither of these words contains any notion of what is unlimited, like our 'perpetual' and 'continual;' i. e. they do not signify what has no end, but only what has no break so long as it lasts.—viae perpetuae are therefore the paths of peace, unbroken by war so long as she was abroad, and he was shut up. Applied to things, we have 'trabes perpetuae in longitudinem,' Caesar, B. G. vii. 23, and 'perpetuae mensae,' Aen. vii. 176; 'perpetui tergum bovis,' ib. viii. 183; 'continui montes, nisi dissocientur opaca Valle,' Hor. Epist. i. 16. 5.

127. Inde] It is not clear whether he means from janua, implied in foribus (125), or from eo, quasi 'Eamus,' the derivation given by Cic. de Nat. Deorum.—libum. It was called janual, according to Festus, quoted by Gierig.

129. ridebis;) From this we may infer that the terms used by the Rex

Et modo sacrificio Clusius ore vocor.

Scilicet alterno voluit rudis illa vetustas

Nomine diversas significare vices.

Vis mea narrata est: causam nunc disce figuræ;

Jam tamen hanc aliqua tu quoque parte vides.

Omnis habet geminas hinc atque hinc janua frontes, 135 sacrificus (ii. 21) were almost obsolete, and sounded barbarous to educated and Grecised Roman ears. Compare inf. 632.

132. diversas vices.] 'The alternation of opposite duties.' Vices means 'the laws of succession,' i. e. the law which determines that some one thing shall always follow another, whether as a natural consequence, or an arbitrary adjustment of duties by turns. Propertius has 'miseras vices,' 'punishment for causing unhappiness,' and Horace 'vices superbae,' 'retribution for pride,' Od. i. 28. 32. Diversus is properly said of a direction, adversus of a point, which is opposite to the speaker. Thus Eurydice, when she leaves Orpheus, and returns to Hades, 'fugit diversa,' Georg. iv. 500. Compare Aen. vii. 132. 150; xi. 261. More rarely it is transferred to quality, like contrarius. Varius implies divergency, or slight difference. Inf. v. 5, 'diversae causae' answers to our use, 'diverse (i. e. several distinct) reasons;' while 'varii dies' (sup. 45) are days having degrees or gradations of difference from each other.

135.] To understand this passage aright the student should refer to Becker's Excursus on the Roman houses, Gallus, p. 237, seqq. The janua, or street-door, opened into a space a little retiring from the street, called vestibulum: whence Virgil says that a palm-tree should overshadow the vestibulum of the beehive, Georg. iv. 20. Varro, L. L. vii. § 81, 'vestibulum, quod est ante domum.' See inf. vi. 303. Behind the janua was a cella for the porter (janitor), precisely where it is placed near college gates to this day. It afforded access either at once or through a small hall or inner portico, ostium, to the principal saloon, atrium (still represented by the patio or inner court of Spanish houses). Beyond this was the cavum aedium, or private familia partment, opening into bed-rooms, and other smaller rooms at the sides. Both of these apartments, in accordance with a primitive eastern construction, had a hole in the roof, or rather, were only partially roofed in. In the atrium, this aperture was designed at first to let out the smoke of the fire kindled below it, on the principle of the gipsy's hut, or the louvre (lantern) above the brazier in a college hall. Hence atrium has been plausibly derived from ater, as μέλαθρον from μέλας, though others with equal probability deduce it from αἶθριον, sub dio. Close to the fire-place (focus) stood the Penates and the tutelary or family Lar, to which Ovid here alludes, though it does not follow from his words, as Becker thinks, that it was close to the door; only that it was opposite to it. In his time, however, a different arrangement had become general, at least in the larger houses, the images of the Lar, &c., being kept in a separate sacellum or 'lararium,' which seems to have been opened only once a month (Propert. v. (iv.) 3. 54), and the focus being transferred to another apartment for culinary purposes only (inf. vi. 302, 'qui tamen in primis aedibus ante fuit'). This is the 'novus ritus' of the atrium mentioned by Horace, Od. iii. 1. 45. In Ovid's house, however, the old arrangement

 Utque sedens vester primi prope limina tecti
 Janitor egressus introitusque videt;
 Sic ego prospicio, caelestis janitor aulae,
 Eoas partes Hesperiasque simul. 140
 Ora vides Hecates in tres vergentia partes, Servet ut in ternas compita secta vias;
 Et mihi, ne flexu cervicis tempora perdam,
 Cernere non moto corpore bina licet.
 Dixerat, et vultu, si plura requirere vellem, 145
 Difficilem mihi se non fore fassus erat.
 Sumpsi animum, gratesque deo non territus egi,
 Verbaque sum spectans pauca locutus humum:
 Dic, agē, frigoribus quare novus incipit annus,
 Qui melius per ver incipiendus erat? 150
 Omnia tunc florent, tunc est nova temporis aetas,
 Et nova de gravido palmite gemma tumet,
 Et modo formatis operitur frondibus arbos,
 Prodit et in summum seminis herba solum, was preserved; for he says (Trist. i. 3. 43) of his wife:—

‘Illa etiam ante Lares passis prostrata capillis
 Contigit extinctos ore tremente focos.’

The exact position of the focus in the old atrium cannot be determined.

141.] tres and ternas are emphatic, and contrasted with bina in 144: ‘If Hecate looks in three directions at once, why should not I look in two?’ This goddess, the infernal representative of Luna, and called ‘Trivia,’ from the Greek τρίοδος, used to stand, like the Hermae, in the streets of Greek towns (Varro, L. L. vii. § 6), and perhaps generally where three ways met. A dog was sacrificed to her, inf. 389, either because dogs bay at the moon, and were thought to announce her presence (Theocr. ii. 35), or in her character as the huntress Diana. It is a natural impulse to erect some kind of pillar or statue at the intersection of cross-roads. In this case three heads, a horse, a lion, and a dog, were so sculptured as to present a different appearance at each point of divergence.

152. palmite] ‘Palme’ is the new shoot formed in the spring, from which the grape-blossom (gemma) is protruded. It appears to be the same as ‘sarmentum.’ Cic. de Senect. 15. § 53, ‘Itaque incunte vere in iis quae relicta sunt existit tanquam ad articulos sarmentorum ea quae gemma dicitur, a qua oriens uva se ostendit.’ The goats, which are fond of vine-leaves, used to eat the palmites, and so diminish the crop. Inf. 354. See iv. 128. Virg. Ecl. vii. 48: ‘jam laeto turgent in palmite gemmae.’

153. operitur frondibus] Another reading is ‘amicitur vitibus,’ which is less appropriate, for the mention of the vines has just been made; though Gierig has adopted it for that very reason. Operitur points to that ancient idea of leaves which regarded them as ‘little scales;’ for folium is φολιον, the diminutive of φολις, contracted into φύλλον.—herba, as frequently, is the blade of corn.

163.] The answer, it will be observed, in fact assigns no reason at all ; for the assumption that the sun begins a new course after the winter solstice is both arbitrary and fanciful. But the Romans were accustomed to reckon thus, perhaps from remote tradition. Varro, L. L. vi. § 8, 'Tempus a bruma ad brumam dum sol redit, vocatur annus, quod ut parvi circuli anuli, sic magni dicebantur circites anni, unde annus.' Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 19, καθόλου μὲν γὰρ οὐδέν ἐστι φύσει τῶν ἐν κύκλῳ περιφερομένων οὐτ' ἔσχατον οὔτε πρῶτον, νόμῳ δ' ἄλλην ἄλλοι τοῦ χρόνου λαμβάνουσιν ἀρχήν.

165. litibus] Here used in the technical sense, and to be distinguished from lite in ver. 73. The meaning is, that a mere semblance of business was allowed on New Year's day, lest it should be a bad omen to begin with idleness. This was called auspicari. See Tac.

Ann. iv. 36, where Lipsius refers to Suet. Ner. §§ 7 and 46.

167. commisi,] 'Mandavi,' 'constitui.'—auspicio, 'die auspicali.'

169. ob idem] i. e. 'ob eandem causam,' sc. omnis gratia. There is another reading obiter.—delibat means, 'takes a taste of.' See ii. 653. Sueton. Oct. § 57, 'delibante tantummodo eo summarum acervos, neque ex quoquam plus denario auferente.'—nec plus quam testificatur must be taken together : 'He does no more than afford evidence of his usual employment,'—as if a cobbler were to stand at his door and set a dozen stitches to a shoe, and then close his shop for the day.

171. quamvis placem,] 'Though the primary object is to pray to some other god.' This custom is readily explained by Janus's prerogative as the initiator and beginner of every thing (112).

172. tura] 'Tus' or 'thus' is the Roman form of θύος. The hard dental was preferred to th, except in such words as are directly Greek, as thalamus, theatrum, thesaurus.

- Ut possis aditum per me, qui limina servo,
 Ad quoscumque voles, inquit, habere deos.
 At cur laeta tuis dicuntur verba Kalendis, 175
 Et damus alternas accipimusque preces?
 Tum deus incumbens baculo, quem dextra gerebat,
 Omina principiis, inquit, inesse solent.
 Ad primam vocem timidas advertitis aures,
 Et visam primum consulit augur avem. 180
 Templata patent auresque deum, nec lingua caducas
 Concipit ulla preces, dictaque pondus habent.
 Desierat Janus; nec longa silentia feci,
 Sed tetigi verbis ultima verba meis:
 Quid vult palma sibi rugosaque carica, dixi, 185
 Et data sub niveo candida mella cado?
 Omen, ait, causa est, ut res sapor ille sequatur,
 Et peragat coeptum dulcis ut annus iter.
 Dulcia cur dentur video; stipis adjice causam,
 Pars mihi de festo ne labet ulla tuo. 190

175, 176.] This passage shows the antiquity of the custom of 'wishing a happy new year.' The addition of some trifling gift (185—189) is more generally observed on the continent than with us. See also on ii. 617.

179. Ad primam vocem] The Greek doctrine of φήμαι and κληδόνες resembled this. See on Prom. Vinct. 494. In much the same way the Romans drew omens from greetings, as 'salve,' or from lucky names, such as Valens, Salvius. See Cic. de Div. i. 45. Tac. Hist. iv. 24. 53.

181. templata patent,] sc. illo die, Jani festo.—caducas, irritas.—pondus habent. Vain prayers were said to be carried away by the wind.

184. tetigi] There is no connexion between the reply of Janus and the question which follows. He means therefore 'continuavi orationem,' sc. nullam moram interposui quin statim quaererem.

185. palma] Probably the date, 'caryota,' which was gilded and sent for a new year's gift. Martial, Ep. viii. 33. 11:—

'Hoc linitur sputo Jani caryota Kalendis,
 Quam fert cum parvo sordidus asse cliens.'

Ib. xiii. 27:—

'Aurea porrigitur Jani caryota Kalendis;
 Sed tamen hoc munus pauperis
 esse solet.'

It was of no value, but merely a symbolical gift, like our 'Easter eggs.' Presents were sent on the Saturnalia, Mart. iv. 88. 1; on birth-days, ib. viii. 38. 14; and on the Matronalia, or first of March (the first of the cyclic year), Tibull. iii. 1. 3.

186. niveo cado] A jar of white terra cotta.

187. sequatur,] 'Sequi' is properly 'to keep up with,' 'to attend,' rather than 'to go behind,' λείπεσθαι. It has (in other words) the notion of following without losing ground. They gave sweetmeats as an omen, that the sweets of life might predominate over the bitter throughout the year.

189. stipis] Small brass coins

Risit, et, O quam te fallunt tua saecula, dixit, Qui stipe mel sumpta dulcius esse putes!
 Vix ego Saturno quemquam regnante videbam,
 Cujus non animo dulcia lucra forent.
 Tempore crevit amor, qui nunc est summus, habendi; 195
 Vix ultra quo jam progrediatur habet.
 Pluris opes nunc sunt quam prisci temporis annis,
 Dum populus pauper, dum nova Roma fuit,
 Dum casa Martigenam capiebat parva Quirinum,
 Et dabat exiguum fluminis ulva torum. 200
 Juppiter angusta vix totus stabat in aede, Inque Jovis dextra fictile fulmen erat.

were given (the 'parvus' of Martial, ut sup.) on this day, called trenae, either alone or in conjunction with other trifles. The origin of the word, and its connexion with trenuus, is not very clear. See Varronianus, p. 114. στρηνής seems to mean 'coarse and rough,' and the word was not inaptly applied to the old coinage. The emperors themselves did not disdain to receive this coin, perhaps to patronize a popular custom. The notion was, that to make money on new-year's day would ensure a supply during the year, just as some say that it is lucky to hear the first cuckoo with money in your pocket. Sueton. Oct. § 57: Omnes ordines in lacum Curtii quotannis ex voto pro salute ejus stipem jaciebant; item Kalendis Januariis strenam in Capitolio, etiam absenti. Ib. § 91: 'ex nocturno visu etiam stipem quotannis die certo emendicabat a populo, cavam manum asses porrigentibus praehens.' Ib. Calig. § 42: 'edixit et trenas incunte anno se recepturum: tetitque in vestibulo aedium Kalendis Januariis ad captandas stipes, suas plenis ante eum manibus acinu omnis generis turba fundebat.' The etymology of stips, whence stipendium, is rather uncertain. Varro, L. L. v. § 182, writes: 'nam quod asses librales pondo erant, qui acceperant majorem numerum non in arca ponebant, sed in aliqua cella stipabant, id est componebant, quo minus loci occuparet; ab stipendio stipem dicere coeperunt.' He adds, as an after-thought perhaps, 'stips ab στοιβή fortasse, Graeco verbo.' Stipare and στείβειν are in fact the same words.

194. lucra] See on v. 292.

199. casa] On the 'casa Romuli' see note on Propert. v. l. 9. It was kept up in its original state, or according to some traditional standard, till a late era of the empire, though its site seems to have been more than once changed. Inf. iii. 184. Virg. Aen. viii. 654. On ulva see v. 519.—dum capiebat, ii. 263.

201. vix totus stabat] The temple was hardly large enough to contain the statue. Gierig makes stabat imply a standing as opposed to a sitting posture. Compare Martial's amusing account of his little farm, xi. 18. 10:—

'In quo nec cucumis jacere rectus,
 Nec serpens habitare tota possit.'

Ovid probably had in view the similar verses of Propertius, v. (iv.) l. 5:—

'Fictilibus crevere deis haec aurea templa,
 Nec fuit opprobrio facta sine arte casa;'

and ib. 7, 'Tarpeiusque pater nuda de rupe tonabat,' sc. where the temple of Jupiter Tonans was afterwards erected.

- Frondebis ornabant, quae nunc Capitolia gemmis, Pascebatque suas ipse senator oves ;
 Nec pudor in stipula placidam cepisse quietem, 205
 Et foenum capiti supposuisse fuit.
 Jura dabat populis posito modo praetor aratro,
 Et levis argenti lamina crimen erat.
 At postquam fortuna loci caput extulit hujus,
 Et tetigit summos vertice Roma deos ; 210
 Creverunt et opes et opum furiosa cupido,
 Et cum possideant plurima plura petunt.
 Quaerere ut absumant, absumpta requirere certant ;
 Atque ipsae vitiis sunt alimenta vices.
 Sic, quibus intumuit suffusa venter ab unda, 215
 Quo plus sunt potae, plus sitiuntur aquae.
 In pretio pretium nunc est ; dat census honores,
 Census amicitias ; pauper ubique jacet.
 Tu tamen auspiciū si sit stipis utile quaeris,
 Curque juvent nostras aera vetusta manus. 220
 Aera dabant olim ; melius nunc omen in auro est,
 Victaque concessit prisca moneta novae.

207. praetor] This was the ancient military title of the consul. Varro, L. L. v. § 87: 'in re militari praetor dictus, qui praerit exercitui.' There is another reading consul. In either case Cincinnatus is alluded to. On jura dabat see sup. 37. The praetor urbanus was said jus dare or dicere in a very different sense. — lamina. 'Nempe Cornel. Rufinum, bis Cons. et Dictatura functum, Fabricius Censor A. U. 478 senatu movit, quod decem pondo libras facti argenti haberet. Gellius, N. A. iv. 8; xvii. 21.' Gierig.

212. cum] 'Whereas' or 'although.'

214. vitiis] 'Luxuria' and 'avaritia;' which thrive by a mutual relation and dependence, though apparently contrary.

215. ab unda,] 'Ab' is sometimes added with neuter verbs, and even with active, when the cause rather than the instrument is implied. So Propert. iv. (iii.) 2. 19: 'at non ingenio quaesitum nomen ab aevo Excidet.' Tibull. i. 5. 3: 'turbo, Quem celer assueta versat ab arte puer.' Inf. iii. 321. For the simile of the dropsy compare Hor. Od. ii. 2. 13.

217. In pretio pretium] 'Pecunia aestimatur.' Gierig. The play on words is illustrated on iii. 113 and 857.

219. Tu tamen] 'And yet you, as if the matter were not obvious, ask whether,' &c.—nostras manus. This seems to mean that some stips was put into the hand of Janus on this day. He can hardly be supposed to identify himself with the citizens, when he might so easily have said vestras. Perhaps this was done by way of a beginning, as sup. 172.

222. moneta] This word, whence our 'money,' properly signifies the Mint, which derived its name from being close to the temple of Juno Moneta. Inf. 638; vi. 183.

Nos quoque templa juvant, quamvis antiqua probemus,
 Aurea; majestas convenit ista deo.
 Laudamus veteres sed nostris utimur annis; 225
 Mos tamen est aequè dignus uterque coli.
 Finierat monitus; placidis ita rursus, ut ante,
 Clavigerum verbis alloquor ipse deum:
 Multa quidem didici: sed cur navalis in aere
 Altera signata est, altera forma biceps? 230
 Noscere me duplici posses in imagine, dixit,
 Ni vetus ipsa dies extenuaret opus.
 Causa ratis superest: Tuscum rate venit in amnem
 Ante pererrato falcifer orbe deus.
 Tac ego Saturnum memini tellure receptum; 235
 Caelitibus regnis ab Jove pulsus erat.
 Unde diu genti mansit Saturnia nomen;
 Dicta quoque est Latium terra latente deo.

223. templa Aurea;] This alludes to the temple of Janus dedicated by Numa in 770, and consequently the passage must have been inserted in the second edition or revision of the poem. Tac. Ann. ii. 49: 'isem temporibus deum aedes vetuste aut igni abolitas coeptasque ab Augusto dedicavit,—et Jano temum, quod apud forum Olitorium Caius Duilius struxerat, qui primus in Romanam prospere gessit triumphumque navalem de Poenis meruit.' The completion and adornment of this temple would probably have been in progress in the preceding year. See on ver. 3, sup. Inf. 257.

229. navalis forma] An engraving of an as, preserved in the British Museum, and bearing the two-faced Janus on one side and the prow of a ship on the other, is given in the Dictionary of Antiq. (in v. as.) Plut. Quaest. Rom. § 41: διὰ τί τὸ ἀλαϊὸν νόμισμα πῆ μὲν εἶχεν ἀνοῦ διπρόσωπον εἰκόνα, πῆ δὲ πλοίου πρύμναν ἐγκεχαραγμένην; ἄλλοτερον (ὡς οἱ πολλοὶ λέγουσιν) ἐπὶ τῆμῃ Κρόνου πλοίῳ διαπεράντων εἰς Ἰταλίαν; He adds another explanation, that whereas good laws and plenty of means are the chief blessings in a city, the one was due to Janus, the other to the river which conveyed supplies.

231.] He replies first to the question about the two heads. In imagine is the reading of good MSS., and seems to give a better sense. Merkel has ut, which implies some ellipse: 'That you might recognize me by the double image (as you would still do on the old coins), did not age render the impression indistinct.'

233. Latium] Dr. Donaldson has shown (Varronianus, pp. 6 and 61) that the words Latium, Lavinium, Latinus (Latvinus), the ancient 'Latuinians,' and the modern 'Lithuanians,' are all different forms of the same word, signifying 'freedmen.' Virgil gives the absurd derivation from latere, Aen. viii. 321, seqq. :—

'Is genus indocile ac dispersum
 montibus altis
 Composuit, legesque dedit, Latiumque vocari Maluit, his quoniam latuisset tutus in oris.'

At bona posteritas puppim formavit in aere,
 Hospitis adventum testificata dei. 240
 Ipse solum colui, ejus placidissima laevum
 Radit arenosi Tibridis unda latus.
 Hic, ubi nunc Roma est, incaedua silva virebat, Tantaque res paucis pascua bubus erat.
 Arx mea collis erat, quem cultrix nomine nostro 245
 Nuncupat haec aetas, Janiculumque vocat.
 Tunc ego regnabam, patiens cum terra deorum
 Esset, et humanis numina mixta locis.
 Nondum Justitiam facinus mortale fugarat :
 Ultima de superis illa reliquit humum. 250
 Proque metu populum sine vi pudor ipse regebat ;
 Nullus erat justis reddere jura labor ;

241. laevum latus.] The Roman side of the Tiber was 'sinistra ripa,' Hor. Od. i. 2. 15; consequently the left side of Etruria, in which Janiculum stands, is that across the water.

243. silva] Infra v. 639, seqq. The subject, as Gierig observes, was a favourite one with the Roman poets; and the fact seems attested by such names as Esquiliae (aesculus), Querquetulanus, Viminalis. See on Propert. v. (iv.) 8. l.

245. cultrix] 'Incolens montem.' Gierig. It may also mean 'cultui meo dedita.' Cf 395.

249. Justitiam] So Met. i. 150: 'ultima coelestium terras Astraea reliquit.' It was a common saying of the ancients, that Justice was the last of the celestials to leave the earth. The 'golden age' was an age of primitive simplicity, which is often accompanied with the practice of natural virtues, and corresponding happiness. 'When a rude people,' says Dr. Arnold (Hist. of Rome, i. p. 436), 'have lost somewhat of their ferocity, and have not yet acquired the vices of a later stage of civilization, their character really exhibits much that is noble and excellent, and both in its good and bad points it so captivates the imagination, that it has always been regarded by the writers of a more advanced state of society with an admiration even beyond its merits.' With the increase of the vices attendant on civilization evils began to multiply (sup. 195); but it was long before respect for the rights of a neighbour (which is justitia) became wholly obliterated and lost. This is in fact one of the first and most deeply-rooted of all principles, inasmuch as the very existence of society, before the institution of coercive laws, depends upon it. See inf. ii. 660.

251. Pro metu pudor] 'Pudor' is 'self-respect,' 'honour,' which is always joined with respect for others. The Greek philosophers considered αἰδῶς καὶ δέος inseparable: so inf. v. 29: 'consedere simul Pudor et Metus;'; so also Hesiod joins Αἰδῶς καὶ Νέμεσις, Opp. 198. But there was another view, that virtue should be practised for its own sake, not from fear of punishment. See Hor. Epist. i. 16. 52:—

'Tu nihil admittes in te formidine poenae:
 Oderunt peccare boni virtutis amore.'

Propert. v. (iv.) 11. 48: 'ne possem melior judicis esse metu.'

Inde, velut nunc est, per quem descenditis, inquit,

Arduus in valles et fora clivus erat.

253. cum bello,] Sc. 'tunc non erant bella quibus interessem.' Compare sup. 121.

257. tot Jani,] Any archway or close thoroughfare was called 'a Janus;' but in one place only was there a statue of the god, viz. in the temple between the Forum Romanum and Forum Julium. But even this, properly speaking, was not so much a temple as a portico or grand gateway, affording communication between the two. Hence Varro, L. L. v. § 165: 'Janualis (porta) dicta a Jano; et ideo ibi positum Jani signum; et jus institutum a Pompilio, ut scribit in Annalibus Piso, ut sit aperta semper, nisi quom bellum sit nusquam.' To this statue Virgil alludes, Aen. vii. 610: 'nec custos assistit limine Janus.' When the great gates were closed, it is probable that a wicket or side-door allowed the people to pass through. It was known as the temple of Janus Bifrons or Geminus, and was built by Numa (Livy, i. 19) 'ad infimum Argiletum,' i.e. the part between the southern horn of the Quirinal and the Forum Romanum, or, in the other direction, between the Capitol and the Subura. This must be distinguished from the temple of Duilius, supra 223. Merkel, p. cclxiii.: 'Probabile est Ovidium, cum primum ver. 257 scriberet, unum tantum Jani sacellum, sive templum, inter duo fora novisse, et ver. 277 ad hoc retulisse veterem ritum claudendi et aperiendi, prout etiam, paulo aliter fortasse, fecit Varro, 5. 165.' He appears to consider the temple built by Numa as the same spoken of in ii. 201, and distinct from this; whereas Keightley (Excursus i. p. 226) identifies them. Mr. Maclean on Hor., p. 496 (school edition), seems to agree with Merkel. The subject is full of doubts and difficulties.

260. Oebalii] Titus Tatius, king of the Sabines, is called Oebalius from some legend, probably derived from Magna Graecia, that the Sabines had Spartan blood in their veins. See iii. 230.

262. arcis iter] is 'the way up to the Capitol.' To this path, which Propertius minutely describes as a concealed and thorny track, Tarpeia is said to have led the Sabines; the truth being, that the Capitoline hill was a Sabine settlement from the first. See Prop. v. (iv.) 4. 48, &c. Keightley has an idea, but surely a wrong one, that 'iter' signifies 'the level of the Capitol at the head of the clivus.'

263. Inde,] 'a summa arce.' He means that the regular pathways from the Capitol to the Forum Romanum and F. Boarium did not exist, though the slope was the same. Merkel gives per fora with the best Nec mora, quaesiti reddita causa mihi est.

MSS., and explains it of the F. Romanum and F. Piscatorium, immediately under the Carinae, to the east (p. cxx.).

265. portam,] From the context, this would seem to mean the gate of the arx, and the gush of water to be that which Propertius describes as running down the slope. But it rather means, 'The Sabines had now reached the gateway in the Forum, which had been left open, when,' &c. —Dempserat, because the sera was a bar placed across the door, and wholly removed when it was opened, as may still be seen in old churches and castles. Juno is said to have done this, because she was hostile to the Trojogenae.

267. numine] It was the rule for one god never to interfere directly with the designs of another, though he might thwart them.—cum means 'with:' see on iii. 34. Arnold, Hist. R. i. p. 9, gives the legend thus : 'As the Sabines were rushing in, behold, there burst forth from the temple of Janus, which was near the gate, a mighty stream of water, and it swept away the Sabines, and saved the city. For this it was ordered that the temple of Janus should stand ever open in time of war, that the God might be ever ready, as on this day, to go out and give his aid to the people of Romulus.' From this event the temple or gateway was called Lautolae. Varro, L. L. v. § 156 : 'Lautolae a lavando, quod ibi ad Janum Geminum aquae caldae fuerunt.' Nor need we doubt that some truth lies at the bottom of this story, as in that of the Lacus Curtius, vi. 403, inf., for the site and neighbourhood of Rome are volcanic, and ancient outbreaks of this kind might have been speculated on apart from history or tradition. See Humboldt, Aspects of Nature, ii. p. 219.—meae artis, sc. that of opening.

274. tuto loco, i.e. a me servato. The meaning is not quite plain : 'The site was afterwards left clear and unoccupied, and a temple and altar erected to my honour;' i.e. the buildings were removed that it might be consecrated to me.

276. strue] Keightley quotes Festus in v. : 'Genera liborum sunt, digitorum conjunctorum non dissimilia, qui superjecta panicula in transversum continentur.' Suis flammis, meaning, of course, those of the altar. Merkel conjectures ferta, for Festus and Paul the Deacon speak of both strues and fertum as two kinds of liba offered together.

281. possit:] sc. Pax. See on 21, sup.—Caesareo nomine, i. e. sub imperio Tiberii. He prophesies thus much of the new reign, deriving an omen from the victory gained by Germanicus over the Germans. Augustus, it is well known, had closed the temple of Janus three times. See Hor. Od. iv. 15. 9. Sueton. Oct. § 22: 'Janum Quirinum, semel atque iterum a condita urbe ante memoriam suam clusum, in multo breviori temporis spatio, terrarumque pace parta, ter clusit.'

283. diversa] i. e. before and behind. See supra, 132.—vestri triumphii, i. e. Germanicus and Tiberius. The triumph here mentioned was celebrated in 770, but had been decreed two years before, so that the poet speaks of it prospectively. See Tac. Ann. ii. 41: 'Gaio Caecilio, Lucio Pomponio Consulibus, Germanicus Caesar ante diem septimum Kalendas Julias triumphavit de Cheruscis Chattisque et Angrivariis, quaeque aliae nationes usque ad Albim colunt. Vecta spolia, captivi, simulacra montium, fluminum, proeliorum: bellumque, quia conficere prohibitus erat, pro confecto accipiebatur.' This explains ver.

286. The Rhine was actually represented in the spectacle. See Ep. ex Pont. ii. l. 39, where it is described; and as the poet was in exile at the time, the programme had probably been published before: 'Fluminaeque, et montes, et in altis pascua silvis.' So we must literally understand Propert. ii. l. 31:—

'Aut canerem — Nilum, cum tractus in urbem
Septem captivis debilis ibat aquis.'

287. aeternos] May the house of Caesar never fail. Auctor is Tiberius, and by suum opus the poet perhaps humours the emperor's jealousy of Germanicus, to whom the peace was really due.

291.] In an island, formed perhaps by the alluvial deposits of the Tiber, stood two temples or sacella, dedicated to Aesculapius and Jupiter, or, as Merkel thinks, p. cxxiv., to Vedjovis (iii. 443). Besides these there was a temple to Faunus, ii. 194. Keightley suspects, from juncta sunt in 294, that the two former stood close together. That of Aesculapius was dedicated in or about the year 460 (Livy x. fin.), that

See Met. xv. 739 :—

Porrigit aequales media tellure lacertos.
Huc se de Latia pinu Phoebeius anguis
Contulit ; et finem, specie coeleste resumpta, Luctibus imposuit, venitque salu-tifer urbi.’

296. promissi mei.] See sup. 2. The following verses to 311 are an introduction to the astronomical part of his work, as 45—62 explained the general principles of the festivals. The Roman poets often express their aspirations for a knowledge of nature, in which they seem to have been conscious of their inferiority to the Greeks. Ovid describes the first astronomers as exalted far above all sublunary things, and as having climbed to heaven more effectually than did the giants of old by piling Ossa on Olympus.

305. Admovere] A word more applicable to our telescopes than to the mere unaided science which brought the motions of the planets within human ken. — supposuere, ‘subjected.’

307. non ut ferat] ‘Non vero ea ratione ut,’ &c.

309. ducibus illis.] The early professors. — Metabimur, ‘we will gauge the heaven’ (to use a modern term). The word is, however, taken from the division of the sky into templa or regiones by the augur’s lituus, not from castrametation, as Keightley thinks, misled by signa. The latter are the Zodiacal signs ; and the meaning is, ‘we will assign their proper days to certain celestial signs.’ Suos has often the sense of proprius in the Fasti. Gierig reads stata signa, ‘fixed stars.’ Cf. 660.

 Nominis esse potest succinctus causa minister,
 Hostia caelitibus quo feriente cadit; 320
 Qui calido strictos tincturus sanguine cultros, Semper Agone? rogat; nec nisi jussus agit.

311. Ergo] i. e. to proceed at once to the promised observations.

315. Institerint Nonae] 'Should the Nones be at hand.' So ii. 453: 'orta dies fuerit.' We can hardly say in such cases that si or cum is to be supplied. A hypothetical event is assumed as prospectively realized, and a consequence deduced from it. There is a slightly different usage in iv. 487; v. 113. Merkel gives, 'Institerint imbres missi tibi nubibus atris: Nonae signa dabunt,' &c., which is the reading of most MSS., with some minor variations. Yet the order in the text seems far more probable in itself. It was the rain which gave signs of the Nones, not the Nones of the rain, for signa are visible marks. Signa dabunt may also mean 'ostendent se.' See iv. 904.

319. succinctus minister,] Compare iv. 413. We have 'succincti popae' in Propert. v. (iv.) 3. 62. Suetonius says of Caligula, § 32: 'Admota altaribus victima, succinctus poparum habitu, elato alte malleo, cultrarium mactavit.' It thence appears that two persons were employed to kill (at least the larger) victims, one of whom felled the animal, the other cut the throat.

Ovid either speaks of one and the same minister in 'quo feriente,' and 'tincturus cultros,' or ferire must be understood of the blow of the knife (see iv. 415), and cadit be taken for mactatur. Succinctus refers to the short apron worn round the loins of the popa.

322. Agone?] 'Am I to strike?' Merkel edits agatne, a very inferior reading, but has recalled agone, in his preface, from one of the best MSS. The indicative is rather unusual, but may have been adapted to the sound of the word. It is more likely that it comes from ἀγών, whether in the sense of 'agony,' or the more common one of 'an assembly.' Varro, L. L. vi. § 12: 'Agonales per quos Rex in Regia arietem immolat, dicti ab agone, eo quod interrogatur a principe civitatis, et princeps gregis immolatur.' This account is confused, if not corrupt: the question was put to the Rex sacrificus, not by him; and the 'princeps gregis' introduces a totally different etymology, from ἄγειν or agere. Keightley explains strictos cultros 'grasped,' 'held in the hand.' But stringere cultrum or gladium is 'to draw it,' properly 'to strip it;' for the verb implies the friction caused by passing one thing roughly over another. So 'stringere glandes,' 'to strip off acorns,' Georg. i. 305 ; 'stringere ripas,' said of a river, Aen. viii. 63 ; of a weapon which grazes the skin, Aen. ix. 377 ; of an idea which leaves an impression on the mind, Aen. ix. 294.

325. Agnalia] The argument is futile : if this was the true ancient name he would have to account for the insertion of o in the later form. Conversely, the case might really have been so.

327. praevisos in aqua] Cf. Met. xv. 134 : 'victima—percussa sanguine cultros Inficit in liquida praevisos forsitan unda.' Animals have an instinctive presentiment that they are going to be killed, which was wrongly attributed to the reflection of the knife in the vessel of lustral water which stood near the altar.—metu, 'the agony of fright.'

331. Agonia] The word is recorded by Festus, 'hostiam antiqui Agoniam vocabant,' but not by Varro. It does not sound like a genuine Italian term.

334. conjuge ovis.] Like 'olentis uxores mariti,' said of goats, Hor. Od. i. 17. 7.—Rex Sacrorum, inf. ii. 21. The meaning of debet is, that no victim but the goat is allowed. This leads to a long digression on the different kinds of victims offered to the gods (337—456). Formerly, he says, neither incense nor bloody sacrifices were in use ; only meal and salt. This was one of the fabled beatitudes of the golden age. Virg. Georg. ii. 536 :—

'Ante etiam sceptrum Dictaei regis,

 Impia quam caesis gens est epulata
 juvencis,
 Aureus hanc vitam in terris Sa-turnus agebat.'

343. herbis Sabinis,] ‘Savine’ (Juniperus Sabina). Like vervain (381), it was a sacred plant, for some unknown reason. Perhaps it was first used in philtres, as it has strong medicinal properties, then in incantations, lastly for religious purposes.—laurus, &c. See sup. 76.

347. percussi tauri,] See on ver. 319. Aperit viscera is said of cutting up the victim, which was done immediately (Met. xv. 136), and probably by the same culter which had killed it.

354. debueras abstinuisse,] Accurate latinity requires debebas abstinere. But in the poets the perfect infinitive of the one verb and the pluperfect of the other are often substituted. Heroid. xii. 4 : ‘debuerant fusos evoluisse meos.’ Trist. iii. 13. 4 : ‘debueras illis imposuisse manum.’ Tibull. iii. ult. : ‘debueram sertis implicuisse comas.’ Similarly inf. iii. 480, ‘potui dedoluisse.’—Varro (L. L. v. § 97), ‘capra, carpa, a quo scriptum omnicarpæ capræ.’ On palme see sup. 152. The goats not only eat the young shoots, but they nibble the bark from the stems, which is alluded to in the next verse. Virg. Georg. ii. 374 :—

‘Frigora nec tantum — Quantum illi nocuere greges, duriq̄ue venenum Dentis, et admorso signata in stirpe cicatrix.
 Non aliam ob culpam Baccho caper omnibus aris
 Cæditur.’

The Romans did not know that a tree cannot live when the continuity of circulation has been interrupted in the bark. Hence they fancied that the mischief was really caused by the poison of the bite.

359. noxæ deditus] i. e. ad poenam traditus. It appears to be a law term.

361.] He goes on to show cause why not only mischievous, but harmless and even useful creatures have been sacrificed. For the story of

- Flebat Aristaeus, quod apes cum stirpe necatas

 Ne detur celeri victima tarda deo.

Aristaeus—which is not very logically introduced to show the origin of offering oxen—see Georg. iv. 315, where there are some slight variations in the narrative.

379. putri] The word properly means 'soft,' 'crumbling,' or 'not cohering,' and is opposed to lentus, 'sticky,' 'tough.' Hence it expresses the softening of decomposition. But 'putrid' is a secondary, and not a common meaning. It is of course an impossibility that bees should really be so produced. Either the maggots were mistaken for the grubs of bees, or a nest of bees found in a dry carcase gave rise to the idea that they had been spontaneously generated there.

381.] The common reading is poscit ovem fatum, which Keightley retains. The best MSS. give pascit ovis prato (thus Merkel), or pratium. There seems no objection to the latter: 'the field feeds the sheep,' while pascit for pascitur is at least unusual.—verbenas. See on 343. Keightley says, 'the legend here alluded to is not noticed by any other writer.' There is no legend to notice. Sheep are fond of the plant (verbena officinalis), and were slaughtered for eating it. It is said that verbena means any plant or shrub used for sacred purposes.

384.] The epithets are not otiose:—'when even the wool-bearing sheep and farm-tilling steer do not escape, what animal can expect safety?'

385. Persis] Περσὶς αἶα, Aesch. Pers. 252. (The name Persia is said not to be classical.) Keightley thinks that Ovid had in view Herod. i. 216, who says of the Massagetæ, θεῶν μούνον Ἡλιον σέβονται, τῶ θύουσι ἵππους. νόμος δὲ οὗτος τῆς θυσίης τῶν θεῶν τῶ ταχίστω πάντων τῶν θνητῶν τὸ ταχίστου δατίονται.—Hyperiona, the sun; the Persian Mithras. In Homer it is an epithet of ἥλιος, ὁ ὑπεριῶν, or rather an adjective formed from the participle. A feminine Hyperionis occurs in v. 159.

387. triplici Dianae.] See on 141. Here the Greek Artemis is meant.—pro nulla virgine, ‘quanquam non, ut olim, pro virgine.’ Gicrig.

389. Triviae] Trivia or Hecate (sup. 141) was a really Thracian, i. e. Pelasgic, goddess, and in this passage is rightly distinguished from Diana. The Sapaeci were a Thracian nation, Herod. vii. 110.—vidi means that he had been an eye-witness to the fact;

for he landed in Thrace when first sent into banishment. Trist. i. 10. 23.

394. tertia bruma] He means the τριετηρίδες, or feasts which recurred after an interval of two years, and in the season of the year which was during the months nearest the shortest day. It does not appear that any one of the four Dionysia is meant.

397. Panes] Πανίσκοι, counterparts of the god Pan, whose connexion with satyrs and revellers made him a fit associate for Bacchus.—Silenus, inf. iii. 750.

403. vina dabat] For the god used to make wine issue from the ground for the use of his votaries. See iii. 785.

404. large] There is another reading parce. Either large agebat or parce miscendas gives a satisfactory sense.

407. tunicam collecta] Not ‘tucked up as to her tunic,' but, 'having her tunic tucked up.' The idiom appears to represent the Greek συσταλαμένη του χιτώνα, or συσταλαμένη. The Greek perfect passive participle often has this middle sense; and its great elegance and convenience tempted the Roman poets to imitate it. The following are examples: inf. vi. 507: 'dissimulata deam.' Virg. Georg. iii. 307: 'Tyrios incocta rubores.' Ib. iv. 337: 'caesariem effusae nitidam.' Ecl. i. 55: 'florem depasta salicti.' Ib. iii. 106: 'flores inscripti nomina regum,' like δέλτων ἐγγεγραμμένην ξυθήματα, Trach. 158. Aen. vii. 503: 'palmis percussa lacertos.' Ib. x. 157: 'rostro Phrygios subjuncta leones.' Hor. Ep. i. 1. 56: 'suspensi loculos.' Propert. i. 3. 11: 'sensus deperditus omnes,' διεφθαρμένος τὰς φρένας. Ib. 34: 'fixa cubitum.' Ib. i. 5. 8: 'nixā caput.' Ib. iii. 7, 24: 'fusa brachia.' This remark does not necessarily apply to pectus aperta in the pentameter. There are many participles which have passed completely into ordinary adjectives, like acutus, tutus, rectus, beatus, &c.

409. exserit] As Greek dresses are described, we must think of the χιτών or χιτωνίσκος rather than of the Roman tunica, which however was derived from it. The former was fastened over the shoulders by clasps, so that if one side was left loose, the shoulder would protrude: dissuto sinu cannot easily be understood unless we suppose that it was laced up in front.—vestem trahit means that it was not tied round the waist with the zona, which so held up the long χιτών that a part of it was overlapped, and hung from it in folds or tucks. See on ii. 321.

410. vincula nulla] Their feet were not encumbered with sandals or shoes, but their legs were bare below the knee. See iii. 823.

411. Hinc,] sc. from their negligent attire.—qui pinu, &c., i. e. Pan.

414. Nequitia est,] He means that in all but lust he was an old man. Nequitia is a synonym of libido, though it often refers to actions rather than propensities.

415. hortorum deus] His figure was indecently placed in gardens. Georg. iv. 110:—

'Et custos furum atque avium cum falce saligna

Hellespontiaci servet tutela Priapi.'

He was worshipped at Lampsacus on the Hellespont. See inf. 340; vi. 341—345. Martial tells of an impudent thief, who, finding nothing else to steal in a garden, stole the tutelary Priapus, vi. 72.

416. Lotide captus] The preposition is omitted for obvious reasons, though generally added with persons. He was not 'taken by,' but 'captivated with,' Lotis. In other words, Lotis is not the agent, but the object. See on ii. 85.

418. notis,] This was a species of 'nequitia' well known to the Ro-

Trist. ii. 1. 454: ‘et tacitam mensae ducit in orbe notam.’ At other times they made signs with their fingers, &c.

419. Fastus] This is often used of contempt shown to a lover’s ad-resses. Propert. i. 1. 3, where see note.

429. librabit] ‘balanced,’ as those do who walk on tip-toe.

447. tamen] Some anticipated objection is implied: ‘(Quod ut temere dictum videatur,) non tamen plane falsum est, nam,’ &c. See sup. 45.—dis proxima, sc. ut quaeque altius volat. The nearer they were to heaven the more closely they were acquainted with the conversation of the gods, which they were thought to communicate by voice (oscines; whence omen for oscimen, Varro, L. 452. Idaliis focis.] The dove was offered to Venus. Propert. v. (iv.) 5. 65 :—

‘Sed cape torquatae, Venus O regina, columbae Ob meritum ante tuos guttura secta focos.’

453. anser] The goose was sacred to Io, or Isis, and Osiris. Juv. vi. 540: ‘anserem magno Scilicet et tenui popano corruptus Osiris.’ Keightley refers to Pausan. x. 32. 9, who says that the rich used to sacrifice to Isis (in Phocis) oxen and stags, but the poor only geese and guinea-fowls.—lauta alludes to the fondness of the Romans for the liver of the goose as a dainty morceau. Juv. v. 114, ‘anseris ante ipsum magni jecur, anseribus par Altilis,’ &c.—lances is used instead of aras, as if the goddess was to be regaled with the delicacy, rather than propitiated by the sacrifice. The story of the geese awaking the guards in the Capitol when nearly surprised by the Gauls is well known: see the fine passage, Aen. viii. 655, seqq.

459. medio discrimine] The division is quite arbitrary, and does not coincide with bruma, the shortest day. The commencement of spring was dated from Feb. 9 (ii. 150).

462. Arcadiae deae.] Carmenta or Carmentis, the mother of Evander, and called dea as one of the Camenae. (On the participial form, like sementis, see Varronianus, p. 298.) Both names are connected with carmen: see inf. 632. Varro, L. L. vii. § 26: ‘Casmenarum priscum vocabulum ita natum ac scriptum est; alibi Carmenae ab eadem origine sunt declinatae. In multis verbis, in quo antiqui dicebant s postea dictum r.—Quare est Casmena Carmenta, ut carmina, carmen; r extrito Camena factum.’ A similar change is Camilla from Casmila, which is said to be a Pelasgic word, Virg. Aen. xi. 543. If a real person, Evander was a Pelasgian. See Heyne on Aen. viii. 51. The Carmental gate at Rome derived its name from an altar erected near the spot to this prophetess. Virg. Aen. viii. 337 :—

‘—— progressus (Evander), monstrat et aram,

463. Turni soror.] The Nymph Juturna. See Aen. xii. 133, seqq.; inf. 708. Her temple was in the Campus Martius, and was erected by Lutatius Catulus; but the spring or spa so called was in the Forum. Perhaps the name is a corruption of 'diuturna,' i. e. 'perennis aqua.' But it was usually derived from juvare, as by Varro, L. L. v. § 71.—Virginea aqua. 'The aqua Virgo brought by Agrippa through aqueducts from a marshy place eight miles from Rome on the Collatine road, for the supply of his thermae. It was conducted below the gardens of Lucullus, which were on the Pincian hill, and so compassed the Campus Martius. It still supplies the beautiful Fontana Trevi. Its name, Frontinus (de Aquaed. 10) says, was owing to its springs having been pointed out by a maiden; but it more probably came from the supposed purity of its waters.' Keightley. Martial, xi. 47. 6, 'corpus perfundit gelida Virgine;'

cf. ibid. v. 20. 9, and vi. 42. 18. Trist. iii. 12. 22, 'defessos artus Virgine tingit aqua.' Ep. ex Pont. i. 8. 38, 'stagnaue et Euripi Virgineusque liquor.' (It is difficult in some places to say whether virgo may not be a general epithet, like 'virgo charta,' Mart. i. 67. 7.)

469. Orta prior luna.] This absurd legend seems to have arisen from a misapprehension of προσέληνοι, an Arcadian word. Etymol. Mag. in v. προουσελλειν λέγουσι τὸ ὑβρίζειν καὶ οἱ Ἀρκάδες ἐπειδὴ λαιδορητικοί εἰσι. Other grammarians, quoted by Hermann on Prom. Vinct. 439, repeat the statement. See inf. ii. 290.—Arcade. He was the son of Callisto, ii. 153.

471. clarus utroque.] His father was Mercury, who was worshipped with special honours by the Arcadians. See Aen. viii. 138.

475. dixerat] 'She had predicted that she and her son would have to fly; and the event proved her to be right.' It is not necessary to supply est with nacta, which refers not to the time when she spoke it, but to

482. deo.] The ablative absolute. —urbe for ex urbe, as the Greeks say διώκεσθαι πόλεως, Aesch. Cho. 281. Inf. iii. 559, 'pellitur Anna domo.'

483. numinis iram ;] In this he alludes to his own banishment, as inf. 540.

485. Conscia] As a man feels his guilt or innocence, so he either despairs or hopes. He was said to have killed his father accidentally.

488. Obruit] The perfect tense.—procella, sc. malorum exilii.

490. Aonia] Boeotia, the country of the Muses, called Aonides.

493. Omne solum] This fine sentiment is from the well-known fragment of Euripides :—

ἅπας μὲν ἀἴρ ἀετῶ περάσιμος, Ἄπασα δὲ χθὼν ἀνδρὶ γενναίῳ πατρίς.

495. tamen] See on 45 sup. The sense is, 'nec tempestas, quamquam saepe furit, toto tamen anno horret.' Compare Propert. ii. 4. 9 :—

'Quippe ubi nec causas nec apertos cernimus ictus,

Unde tamen veniant tot mala, caeca via est ;'

and ib. 5. 5, 'inveniam tamen e multis fallacibus unam,' i. e. 'quamvis pleraeque sint fallaces, tamen,' &c. For the sentiment cf. Hor. Od. ii. 9. 1, 'non semper imbres nubibus hispidos Manant in agros.' Keightley adds Theocr. iv. 44, χῶ Ζεὺς ἄλλοκα μὲν πέλει αἴθριος, ἄλλοκα δ' ὕει.

501. Tarenti.] Very little is known of this place, which seems to have been a plot of low ground in the Campus Martius, occasionally overflowed by the river. An altar of Dis existed on the spot, said to be concealed, perhaps, by the alluvial deposits. Martial, i. 70. 2, writes 'Tarentos,' as also in iv. 1. 8, according to the best MSS., but 'Terrento' in x. 63. 3. Varro, in a corrupt passage, L. L. vi. § 24, mentions Tarentum in connexion with certain sacrifices to the Dii Manes. Merkel (p. cxlvii.) quotes Servius on Aen. viii. 63, '(Tiberis) in aliqua etiam urbis parte Tarentum dicitur, eo quod ripas terat.'

504. Continuit manum] As if to stop the ship, or bring it ashore, in her eagerness to land. The prophecy of Carmentis is a fine and wild strain; and like that of Anchises at the close of Aen. vi., is ingeniously turned into a glorification of the reigning Emperor.

505. dextram] To one ascending the river, Rome was on the right bank. See sup. on 241.—pinea texta, the deck, or perhaps generally for navim.

510. dii—deos,] She greets the indigenous gods already there, and foretells the addition of others, such as Vesta from Troy, and Romulus and the Caesars.

513. este visi] The imperative is used, as not unfrequently in the Greek tragedies, for the optative. The sense, indeed, is nearly equivalent to salvete, favete, &c.

517. olim] In the present tense promittitur futurity is clearly implied. Not that olim, which is the locative of ole for ille, properly means anything more than 'that time,' where the speaker is supposed to point either before or behind. It corresponds to ποτέ, and often means 'some day,' aliquando, as in Hor. Od. iv. 4. 5.

519. jam tangent] 'Jam' is used even with a future tense when an event is impending, and so already all but realised, as Pers. ii. 50, 'jam dabitur, jamjam.' Aeneas arrived but a few years later than Evander. Virgil describes their interview in Aen. viii.—femina, Lavinia, the daughter of Latinus, who was sought in marriage by both Turnus and Aeneas.

Care nepos, Palla, funesta quid induis arma?
 Indue: non humili vindice caesus eris.
 Victa tamen vinces, eversa que Troja resurges;
 Obruet hostiles ista ruina domos.
 Urite victrices Neptunia Pergama flammae:
 Num minus hic toto est altior orbe cinis?
 Jam pius Æneas sacra, et sacra altera patrem, Afferet: Iliacos excipe, Vesta, deos.
 Tempus erit cum vos orbemque tuebitur idem,
 Et fiet ipso sacra colente deo;
 Et penes Augustos patriae tutela manebit.
 Hanc fas imperii frena tenere domum.
 Inde nepos natusque dei, licet ipse recuset,
 Pondera caelesti mente paterna feret.

521. funesta arma?] Pallas, the son of Evander, was slain by Turnus while fighting on the side of Aeneas, but was avenged by the latter when he killed Turnus. It is evident that in all this the poet had the Aeneid in mind.

524. ista ruina] The fall of Troy will eventually bring about the fall of Greece, because that nation will be subjugated in its turn to Rome, built, as it were, on the ruins of Troy. Propert. v. (iv.) l. 53:—

‘Vertite equum Danaï, male vincitis.
 Ilia tellus
 Vivet, et huic cineri Juppiter arma dabit.’

526. Num minus, &c.] ‘Nihilo tamen minus ex illo cinere imperium orietur, totum terrarum orbem occupans.’ Gierig.

528. Iliacos deos.] This seems to mean the Palladium (vi. 422), which, though not brought to Rome with the Penates by Aeneas, was kept in the temple of Vesta. Some have thought from Tac. Ann. xv. 41, ‘delubrum Vestae cum Penatibus populi Romani exustum,’ that the Penates also were kept there; but Ritter shows that the writer means ‘cum delubro Penatum,’ from Varro, L. L. v. § 54.—patrem afferet is not more accurate, since Anchises died before he reached Italy.

529. idem.] This is applicable either to Julius or Augustus Caesar, in their capacity of Pontifex Maximus. The latter transferred the custody of the sacred fire, on which the destinies of the empire were said to depend, to his own house on the Palatine, iv. 949.—ipso deo, Augustus, now dead, but a deus even when alive, according to the extravagant assertion of Roman flatterers.

533.] Tiberius, the adopted son of Augustus, and therefore grandson of Julius, affected hesitation to accept the onerous duties of the empire. Tac. Ann. i. 11, ‘Versae inde ad Tiberium preces. Et ille varie diserebat, de magnitudine imperii sua modestia. Solam divi Augusti mentem tantae molis capacem; se in partem curarum ab illo vocatum experiendo didicisse quam arduum, quam subjectum fortunae regendi cuncta onus.’ Epist. ex Pont. iv. 13. 27:—

 coactus

Saepe recusati ceperit imperii.’

This passage, 531—536, was added on the revision of the poem. For Livia, wife of Augustus, was not called Julia and Augusta till after the will of the late Emperor had been read. Tac. Ann. i. 8, 'Nihil primo senatus die agi passus nisi de supremis Augusti; cujus testamentum, inlatum per virgines Vestae, Tiberium et Livium haeredes habuit. Livia in familiam Juliam nomenque Augustae adsumebatur.' She was not deified till the reign of Claudius. Suet. Claud. §11, 'Aviae Liviae divinos honores—decernendos curavit.'

540. exilium] This is said feelingly, as he revised the poem in his exile at Tomi. See iv. 82.

543. Erytheïdas] Erythea was on the south-west coast of Spain, probably the small peninsula on which Cadiz stands. The arrival of both Evander and Hercules was a ready way of accounting for certain Greek rites and names which were really due either to the Greek colonies in the south of Italy, the Sicilian Greeks, or the Pelasgic immigrants of very early times. The Romans of the empire not only laboured to identify themselves with the Greeks, but to make out a plausible story for every characteristic they possessed in common with that nation. Their religion, as Merkel well observes, p. lii., was essentially historical; they took nothing without knowing, or trying to know, whence it came. In the present narrative Ovid must have had Virgil, Aen. viii. 190, &c., and Propertius, v. 9, in his view, and perhaps also Ennius. Hercules, having brought from the west the herds of Geryon, is entertained by Evander at his new town on the Palatine.—applicat. See on iii. 750.

550.] This verse occurs with little difference in Prop. v. 9. 12, and Martial, v. 65. 6. The idea was probably borrowed from the Homeric hymn to Mercury. It was not that he found no footmarks, but that those which were there only perplexed him, as leading in the wrong direction. The legend of Cacus, so evidently connected with Vulcan and volcanic fires (inf. 573), perhaps records some ancient outbreak in the Campanian Solfatara or Phlegraean plains, destructive (κακόν) to herds which had recently been placed there. See Merkel, p. cccxxvii.

553. pro corpore,] κατὰ τὸ σῶμα,
 'in proportion to his stature.'

559. Servata male] The sense is, Hercules was going away minus his two bulls, when the bellowing of the lost animals to the herd as it passed the cave aroused his attention.—accipio revocamen, like the Greek δέχομαι τὸν οἰωνόν, said when any one acts on a hint dropped or an expression used which can be interpreted as an omen.

565. caelum quoque] Her. ix. 17:—

'Quod te laturum est, caelum prior ipse tulisti:

Hercule supposito sidera fulsit Atlas.'

568. subsedit] i. e. a depression was made.

574. fulgur] 'Flashes of forked lightning, issuing from the column of ashes, darted in every direction; and the rolling thunders were distinctly heard, and distinguished from the sounds which proceeded from the interior of the volcano. In no other eruption had the play of the electric forces formed so striking a feature.' Humboldt, describing the eruption of Vesuvius, in 1822. He adds, 'This phenomenon is associated in all climates with the close of a volcanic eruption.'

575. Occupat] This word, as observed on Propert. v. 10. 14,

Ille cadit, mixtosque vomit cum sanguine fumos,

583. Nec tacet] The meaning is, that Hercules erected an altar to himself, and Evander knew the reason of it from his mother.

586. dea] 'Postquam et ipsa dea facta est.'

587. Idibus] The ides of every month were sacred to Jupiter, sup. 56, where it is said that a full-grown lamb, grandior agna, was offered on that day. It must there be understood as a general term, or rather, as a metrical licence, for the sort of victim is here defined, viz.

a vervex, or castrated animal. Castus implies the virtuous life of a priest, and certain ceremonial observances which he was bound to keep. See inf. ii. 26, and Plut. Quaest. R. § 109.—libat here means simply 'offers.' See inf. 647; ii. 633. 653.

589. provincia] This concession of the provinces to the senate and people was a change in his original policy. At first he considered the patronage too important to be trusted out of the imperial hands. But Merkel (p. lx.) observes that all the provinces never were resigned by Augustus; and he would read immunis, i. e. 'belli immunis, quieta.' Suet. Oct. § 47, 'Provincias validiores, et quas annuis magistratum imperiis regi nec facile nec tutum erat, ipse suscepit: ceteras proconsulibus sortito permisit; et tamen nonnullas commutavit interdum; atque ex utroque genere plerasque saepius adiit.' This was B.C. 27, when the title of Augustus was conferred upon him.—tuis avus. See sup. 3.

had been conferred none ever equalled the dignity of 'Augustus.' — ceras, i. e. 'imagines,' waxen masks of ancestors kept in the atria (sup. 135) of the great. They were probably real likenesses taken during life, and painted artistically (Trist. ii. 521). Wax was used, as being durable and easily moulded into any shape. The figures were ranged round the atrium, with the name written under each; whence perlege in the present passage. Sometimes they were so numerous or so large as to be quite an encumbrance. Martial ii. 90. 6, 'atriaque immo- dicis arcat imaginibus.' The making of them, as so many were required, must have formed a regular trade. Hence Juven. vii. 237, 'Exigite ut mores teneros ceu pollice ducat, Ut siquis cera vultum facit.' Cf. ibid. viii. 2 and 19. Martial vii. 44 :—

'Maximus ille tuus, Ovidi, Caeso-nius hic est,

Cujus adhuc vultum vivida cera tenet.'

Hence also any ordinary portrait was called cera, as Her. xiii. 152. Virgil had these imagines in view, Aen. vii. 177, 'Quin etiam veterum effigies ex ordine avorum Antiqua cedro.' Further information will be found in Becker's Gallus, p. 512.

593.] Examples are given of honourable surnames (agnomina) conferred for great public services. The Scipios had the title of Africanus. Publius Servilius that of Isauricus, from the Isaurae, a Cilician people conquered by him; Q. Caecilius Metellus was styled Creticus, for his conquest of Crete, B.C. 66, though he did not take the title till B.C. 62; another of the same name, who was consul in 109, was called Numidicus for defeating Jugurtha. M. Valerius Maximus obtained the title of Messala from Messana in Sicily. Scipio (P. Aemilianus) was called Numantinus from Numantia in Spain. Compare Propert. v. 11. 29 :—

'Si cui fama fuit per avita tropaea decori,
Afra Numantinos regna loquuntur avos.'

Martial ii. 2 :—

'Creta dedit magnum, majus dedit
Africa nomen, Scipio quod victor, quodque Metellus habet.'

597. Druso] This was the father of Germanicus, and brother of the Emperor Tiberius, and must not be confounded with the Drusus of ver. 12, supra. He was born shortly after Augustus had married Livia, who had been divorced from Tib. Claudius Nero. It is to his honour that Horace wrote Od. iv. 4, to celebrate his early victories. He died near the Rhine of a fall from his horse, in the year B.C. 9.

599. Caesar,] He appears to mean Julius, as he has been contrasting with others the title of Augustus.— si petat, because in fact he had no agnomen.

victory over a single champion, as Manlius Torquatus and Valerius Maximus Corvinus.

603. Magne] Pompey the Great, who, however, was less great than his conqueror, Julius Caesar. Pompey was a man the Romans thoroughly loved and admired ; Julius was a man whom they feared (Juven. x. 109), and Augustus one whom they disliked and flattered. Propertius can hardly restrain his enthusiasm in speaking of Pompey.

605. gradus] The commentators have noticed the climax in Magnus, Major, Maximus. The Fabian house obtained the latter title from the Censor Fabius, who in the year B.C. 304 gained great popularity by confining the libertini to the four city tribes. Livy ix. 46.

609. augusta] Whatever be the real origin of this word, which is uncertain, it is clear that augurium has no connection with it ; at least if augur is for aviger (Varronianus, p. 263). Suet. Oct. § 7, 'Praevaluit ut Augustus potius vocaretur, non tantum novo sed etiam ampliore cognomine : quod loca quoque religiosa, et in quibus augurato quid consecratur, augusta dicantur, ab auctu, vel ab avium gestu gustave, sicut etiam Ennius docet, scribens, Augusto augurio postquam incluta condita Roma est.'

614. querna corona] This was the civic crown, assigned as a reward 'ob servatum civem.' It was voted in perpetuum to Augustus, to be fixed in the vestibule of the palace, as a token of his protection of the citizens in general. See on iv. 953. Here, of course, the allusion is to Tiberius, tanti cognominis heres ; and Merkel (p. cclxiv.) has well explained the passage in reference to his having declined this honour. Suet. Tib. § 26, 'Civicam in vestibulo coronam recusavit.' The poet, therefore, in protegat, expresses a hope that he will condescend to retain it.—vestras, i. e. Tiberius and his successors.

618. relata] Not only the 11th, but the 15th of the month was devoted to the Carmentalia. There may have been some confusion between two distinct Carmentae; indeed Ovid himself does not identify them, but makes them sisters or companions, inf. 634. The Carmenta of this latter festival was not a prophetess, but a sort of Lucina. The carpenta were state-carriages, chiefly used for conveying women in sacred processions, but also driven by wealthy fops, Propert. v. 8. 23. It will be observed that Ovid wrongly derives the word from Carmenta. The root is car, as in carriage, carus, carruca, &c., and has no connection with carpo (inf. 632).

621. honor eripitur,] This was done by C. Oppius, tribune of the people, among other sumptuary enactments passed A. U. 538. Plutarch, Quaest. R. § 56: Δια τί τὸ τῆς Καρμέντης ἱερὸν ἐξ ἀρχῆς δοκοῦσιν αἱ μητέρες ἰδρῦσασθαι, καὶ νῦν μάλιστα σέβονται; λέγεται γὰρ τις λόγος, ὡς ἐκωλύθησαν ὑπὸ τῆς βουλῆς αἱ γυναῖκες ὀχήμασι χρῆσθαι ζευκτοῖς, συνέθεντο ἀλλήλαις μὴ κυΐσκεσθαι μηδὲ τίκτειν, ἀμνόμεναι τοὺς ἀνδρας, ἄχρις οὗ μετέγνωσαν καὶ συνεχώρησαν αὐταῖς γενομένων δὲ παιδῶν, εὐτεκνοῦσαι καὶ πολυτεκνοῦσαι τὸ τῆς Καρμέντης ἱερὸν ἰδρῦσαντο.—destinat, ‘fixes,’ ‘determines;’ the true sense of the word.

627. Bina], i. e. ‘alterum pro

pueris, alterum pro puellis,’ (sc. pro partu felici). There is no allusion to the two festivals of the same name (sup. 618).

629. Scortea] Varro, L. L. vii. § 84, ‘etiam nunc dicimus scortea ea quae ex corio ac pellibus sunt facta; inde in aliquot sacris ac sacellis scriptum habemus,

Ne quid scortum adhibeatur, ideo ne morticinum quid adsit.’

He derives scortum, i. e. ‘meretrix,’ from the same word. The sacellum was near the Carmental gate.—ne violent, &c. They feared lest they should give birth to dead children.

632. non tibi nota] Here, as supra 129, words are cited as obsolete except in sacrificial language. ‘Carmentis’ seems to have had two distinct attributes; that of a prophetess, from carmen, and that of a Parca, or Destiny, from carminare, ‘to card wool,’ in allusion to the fatal thread. Hence Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 56, οἱ δὲ Μοῖραν ἡγοῦνται τὴν Καρμένταν εἶναι, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο θεῖν αὐτῇ τὰς μητέρας. The two words are probably in fact identical; for there was a common expression ‘deducere carmen,’ &c., ‘to spin a song;’ and Mr. Long (on Cic. Cat. Maj. § 61) seems right in deriving carmen from carpere. We have ‘carpere pensum,' Georg. iv. 234. Hor. Od. iii. 27. 64. Carmen is therefore for carpimen, as agmen for agimen, sarmentum for sarpimentum, &c.

633. Porrina] The names here invoked evidently imply certain circumstances favourable to easy birth. Gierig quotes Varro ap. Gell. xvi. 16 : 'hujus periculi deprecandi causa arae statutae sunt Romae duabus Carmentibus, quarum una Postverta nominata est, Prosa altera, a recti perverseque partus et potestate et nomine.' Prosus or prosvus is for proversus; Varro, L. L. vii. § 81. Merkel (p. excix.) suggests with great probability that these terms originally had reference to the methods of writing, viz. either from left to right and back again, or in one uniform direction, since Evander was said to have brought the use of letters into Italy. The phrase 'prosa oratio' confirms this. Ovid's mistake is curious, and we might even criticise his Latinity in making porro mean 'prius,' and postverta 'quae postea vertent.' His words are rather obscure: he may mean, 'the one foretold things remotely future, the other, things soon about to happen.' But Gierig takes porro of past time.

637. Candida,] A general epithet for fiusta, alma, &c., like 'candide Bacche,' iii. 772, and Horace's 'candide Bassareu.' At the same time he makes use of the circumstance that the temple itself was niveum, newly-built. See sup. 80.—Moneta, sup. 231. This temple of Juno stood on the Capitol, and a flight of steps (sup. 263) led up to it from the Forum. Near to these steps was the old temple of Concord. Both were vowed by M. Furius Camillus the dictator. Inf. vi. 183:—

'Arce quoque in summa Junoni
templa Monetae
Ex voto memorant facta, Camille, tuo.'

Merkel assigns the year of the city 388 (B.C. 366) to the dedication of Concordia, and 763 to that of the rebuilding on the same site by Tiberius.—bene prospicies, because the new temple faced the Forum, and thus there was a kind of omen in the prospectus Concordiae. The site has been discovered, behind the arch of Severus (Merkel, p. cxxv.).

641. Etrusci] He captured Falerii in Etruria, B.C. 394.

643. patribus, the patricians.—vulgus, the plebeians. This was one of the many ruptures between the two orders which took place during the early history of Rome. The occasion was the efforts of the plebeians to carry the 'rogationes,' i.e. agrarian and other measures of C. Licinius Stolo, against the patrician influence headed by Camillus. The temple of Concord was intended to cement the union finally effected between the two parties.

645. Causa recens] See Suet. Tib. § 20: 'a Germania in urbem post biennium regressus, triumphum, quem distulerat, egit; prosequentibus etiam legatis, quibus triumphalia ornamenta impetrarat. Dedicavit et Concordiae aedem; item Pollucis et Castoris suo fratrisque [Drusi] nomine de manubiis.' The expedition took place in 763, to avenge the defeat of Quintilius Varus in the preceding year. Suet. Tib. § 18. Tac. Ann. i. 3. The words of Suetonius, as Merkel observes, p. cclxii., might lead one to suppose that the dedication did not take place till 765, when he triumphed for the Pannonian conquest.—triumphatae gentis, the same authority states, are the Sigambri, though the participle must not be taken literally, but simply for victae. The words of Suetonius, 'de manubiis,' &c., seem clearly to refer to the same circumstance.—passos crines porrigit, whatever be the exact meaning, refers also to the defeat of the Sigambri in 747. Gierig quotes Amor. i. 14. 45:—

'Jam tibi captivos mittet Germania crines:
 Culta triumphatae munere gentis eris,' which inclines Keightley to take the present passage literally, as implying an annual tribute of flaxen hair, of which the Romans were very fond; see on iii. 493. But passi crines were a sign of woe often attributed to captives; and the poet probably means that the women held out their long streaming locks to excite compassion in the conqueror. Compare Trist. iv. 2. 43. Merkel edits corrigit, which he thinks can mean 'desecat;' but this is rightly rejected by Keightley.—dux venerande, i. e. Tiberius, now Emperor.

647. libasti] See on 587.—quam colis, sc. 'you set the example of Concord in your own family and conduct.'

649. tua Genitrix] Livia, wife of Augustus.—rebus et ara. These words are obscure. Keightley understands by res, 'property;' Gierig says, 'concordiam rebus ipsis Augusto exhibuit.' He seems to mean that both Tiberius and Livia patronized Concord in two ways, by exhibiting it in their lives, and by joining in the expense of the temple. Rebus perhaps represents ἔργω, 'in fact,' 'in reality.'—digna reperta. In allusion to Augustus' divorce from his former wife Scribonia. See Trist. ii. 162.—magni Jovis, sc. Augusti.

655. Sidere ab hoc] The night after Lyra has set the star which shines in the breast of the Lion will be no longer visible.

657.] The feriae Sementinae. As this was kept at the end of the sowing season, which depended in great measure on the weather, it was not assigned in the calendars to any fixed day, but was one of the conceptivae, i. e. appointed by authority of the Pontifices. Varro, L. L. vi. § 26, 'Sementinae feriae dies is, qui a pontificibus dictus : appellatus a semente, quod sationis causa susceptae. Paganicae ejusdem agriculturae causa susceptae, ut haberent in agris omnes pagi, unde paganicae dictae sunt.' Properly, according to Merkel, p. cliv., indici was used of extraordinary feasts, i. e. not legitima, or 'regular,' but 'subito ad praesens tempus constitutae,' e. g. when any prodigy had to be expiated (procurari). These were also called imperativae.

663. coronati] The crown or chaplet was a sort of acknowledgment of the successful accomplishment of a task. On this principle the sterns of ships returning from a voyage were crowned. Compare with this passage Tibull. ii. l. 8:—

'Solvite vincla jugis; nunc ad praesepe debent
 Plena coronato stare boves capite,'
 &c.

665. suspendat] The ancient ploughs were very light. In Spain, where so many Roman customs remain unaltered to this day, the Castilian often carries the plough to the field on his shoulders.

669. Pagus] The question here arises, whether the poet is speaking of the same feast as above, or the Paganalia. The words of Varro, ut sup., evidently prove nothing. Merkel's view is given in these words (p. clv.), 'Non de diversis feriis intelligendum putaverim Ovidium, sed de eisdem diverso modo in urbe et in agris celebrandis.'

670. paganis focis.] Each pagus had a common altar for the use of the inhabitants. The sacrifice was of a propitiatory character, and as at the Palilia (iv. 735) there was a lustratio, a ceremonial purifying or 'blessing' of the fields and the people. To mother earth especially a cake was offered of her own produce. The nature of the Roman pagi will be best understood from the account of Dr. Arnold, Hist. of Rome, i. p. 79. They were strongholds erected by the country tribes on high ground, to afford refuge both to husbandmen and cattle in case of a hostile invasion. 'Here they all met once a year, and every man, woman, and child, paid on these occasions a certain sum, which being collected by the priests, gave the amount of the whole population.'

674. causam] 'Originem,' i. e. 'semina.' The usual rule respecting hic and ille is here violated.

679. perpetuos] 'Unchecked,' 'uninterrupted.' Supra, 122.—usta. This word, like torreo and torridus, is used alike of cold and heat, the effects of which on vegetation are nearly the same. Inf. iv. 917, 'adusta gelu.' Trist. iii. 2. 8, 'ustus ab assiduo frigore Pontus.' Georg. i. 186, 'neu borcaea penetrabile frigus adurat.' Though snow does not hurt our Cereals, the maize and millet of the Italians seem to have suffered from it.

684. aves.] Here also we must not think of rooks and sparrows, the real or supposed enemies of our farmers, but the 'improbis anser Strymoniaequae grues' of Virgil, Georg. i. 119.

685. parcite granis.] Ants do not really store up corn, as the Romans seem to have believed when they saw them carrying their eggs; nor is it very probable that they ever eat it.

687. scabrae robiginis] See iv. 921. Catull. lxxviii. 151, 'ne vostrum scabra tangat robigine nomen.'—vitio caeli. Virg. Ecl. vii. 57, 'vitio moriens sitit aeris herba.' They attributed to the air effects which were probably due to the want of draining or other causes.

693. passura bis ignem,] It is remarkable that the Romans treated their bread-corn as we treat malt,—they dried it in a kiln before grinding it. The latter art was but rudely performed, and would have been difficult if the grain had been moist and clammy. See inf. ii. 520, seqq., Georg. i. 267, 'nunc torrete igni fruges, nunc frangite saxo.' Aen. i. 178, 'frugesque receptas Et torrere parant flammis et frangere saxo.' The word fruges, which is generally, like fructus, derived from fruor, is perhaps connected with φρύγειν, 'to toast.'

698. aptior ensis] This alludes to the troubles of the civil wars. The same complaint occurs in Georg. i. 507.

701. domui tuae!] The words are addressed to Germanicus, but may have been originally meant for Augustus.

706. Ledaëis deis.] Castor and Pollux. See Suetonius, quoted on ver. 645. It was vowed by A. Postumius, B. C. 498, in consequence of the aid rendered by the twin deities at the battle of Lake Regillus. See Livy, ii. 42. It stood in the Forum, connected with the spring of Juturna (sup. 463), at which Pollux was fabled to have watered his horse after the battle. Whence Propert. iv. (iii.) 22. 26, 'potaque Pollucis lympa salubris equo.'

1—18.] Introductory. This and the following books, the student will remember, are not addressed to Germanicus, but to Augustus, and contain no allusion to any event later than the year of the poet's banishment. See on i. 3.

3, 4.] He means that this is the first occasion on which he has used elegiac verse for any higher subjects than amatory writings. — exiguum opus, insignificant, trifling. His earliest works were the Amores, Heroides, and Ars Amatoria.

5. ipse ego] This is said with some self-complacency, as he had just spoken disparagingly of former efforts.—faciles, 'compliant,' ready to come at my call.

7. signata] See on i. 11. — ad haec illinc, 'ab amore ad sacra.'

9. Haec] i. e. 'non jam militia amoris,' which is the usual expression, and which he probably had in view.

16. titulos tuos.] The various honours assigned to Augustus and commemorated in the Fasti, e. g. the days on which he received the titles of Augustus, Pater Patriae, &c.—pacando hoste, alluding to his victory over the Parthians.

19. patres.] The old inhabitants of Rome, the patrician populus.

Pontifices ab Rege petunt et Flamine lanas,

 Quaeque capit lictor domibus purgamina certis,

Februa, however, is said to be a Sabine word, and therefore was used by the Titienses, or Sabine population of Rome. Varro, L. L. vi. § 13, 'Februum Sabini purgamentum, et id in sacris nostris verbum.' Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 68, τὸν μῆνα Φεβρουάριον καλοῦσι.—τοῦ ῥήματος τὸ καθαίρειν σημαίνουτος.—verbo fidem, proof that such was the original meaning. See on iv. 204.

21. ab Rege] The Rex sacrorum, or Rex sacrificus (i. 333), was a priest distinct from and subordinate to the Pontifices. He was the representative, as the name implies, of the kingly office so far as it was supreme in religion; for in early times king and high priest were one and the same. The title bears a close analogy to the βασιλεὺς ἄρχων of the Athenians, upon whom in like manner the affairs of religion devolved. Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 63, 'Ρωμαῖοι δὲ παντάπασι τοὺς βασιλεῖς ἐκβαλόντες, ἄλλον ἐπὶ τὰς θυσίας ἔταξαν, οὗτ' ἄρχειν ἐάσαντες, οὔτε δημαγωγεῖν, ὅπως μόνον ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς βασιλεύεσθαι δοκῶσι, καὶ βασιλείαν διὰ τοὺς θεοὺς ὑπομένειν. The office of the Rex sacrorum was for life; but the chief duties being to perform the sacrifices on the Calends and Ides, it seems to have been held in no very high estimation. Flamine, i. e. Diali, the priest of Jupiter.—lanas, perhaps for sacred infulae; others think, for use in certain expiatory rites.

23. capit domibus certis,] Keightley renders this, 'takes in the Flamen's house.' The true meaning is uncertain. Perhaps the Flamen sometimes took part in the offerings made to private Penates, and his servant, (who is called lictor, ῥαβδούχος, Plut. Quaest. Rom. § 113), received beforehand, for his use in the ceremony, the salt meal. Hor. Od. iii. 23. 19 :—

'Mollivit aversos Penates
 Farre pio et saliente mica.'

But this is mere conjecture. Merkel (p. clxvi.) gives another; that the allusion is to a custom of sweeping out houses after a birth or a death had taken place in them. But he thinks certis corrupt.

25. arbore pura] This is said to be the pine, inf. 28. From iii. 139, we might have imagined the bay to be meant. On casta see i. 587.

27. Flaminicam] The wife of the Flamen Dialis was so called. Tac. Ann. iv. 16. Inf. vi. 226.

30. intonsos] A common epithet of the early and less polished Romans.

31. Luperci] See inf. 267, seqq., and Propertius, v. i. 26. Varro, L. L. vi. § 34, 'Ego magis arbitrator Februarium a die Febrnato, quod tum februat populus, id est, Lu-

- Aut quia placatis sunt tempora pura sepulcris, Tunc cum ferales praeteriere dies.

- Ah nimium faciles, qui tristia crimina caedis 45

- Sed tamen, antiqui ne nescius ordinis erres,

Qui sequitur Janum veteris fuit ultimus anni;

percis nudis lustratur antiquum oppidum Palatinum gregibus humanis cinctum.' The Luperci ran about the city barely clad in goat-skins, and striking with a thong every person and object which they met (inf. 427).

34. ferales dies.] See inf. 533—570. The ghosts were supposed to be laid by certain expiatory ceremonies anciently performed in this month (inf. 49).

35. mali causam] Any unexpiated guilt. The notion of making atonement is not, as the poet says, Grecian, though the Greeks (as seen in the Eumenides of Aeschylus), adopted the practice. There can be no doubt that in all ages and places it has found favour among men in some form or other. The list that follows is a specimen of that pedantic Greek learning which is so conspicuous in the Augustan writers. The legends will readily be found in the Classical Dictionary.

39. Actoriden] Patroclus, grandson of Actor, II. xxiii. 85. Acastus was the son of Pelias, King of Thessaly, by whom Peleus was absolved for having killed Eurytion, the son of Actor, by an accident in the chase. See Apollodor. iii. 13. 1. Ovid has either followed another legend, or confounded a different one about the murder of Phocus by Peleus and Telamon. Apollodor. iii. 12. 6.

42. Phasida] Medea.

49. ultimus] He stated in i. 43, 44 (probably on a change of opinion), that Numa prefixed January and February to the original ten months of Romulus. He here says that February was formerly the last month in the old year. On this subject there is a passage of Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 19, which deserves to be given at length: 'Why do they accept January as the beginning of the new year? For anciently March was counted first, as is clear from other proofs, and because the fifth month from it was called Quintilis, the sixth Sextilis, and so on to the tenth, which was named December. Whence some have maintained that the early Romans

Tu quoque sacrorum, Termine, finis eras. 50

 Postmodo creduntur spatio distantia longo made up the year not of twelve, but of ten months, adding to some of the months more than thirty days. Others assert that December means the tenth from March, January being the eleventh, and February the twelfth month, in which they perform expiatory rites to the dead as at the close of the year; but that the order of succession was changed, and January put first, because on the first of this month the first consuls were nominated after the expulsion of the kings. But it is more credible that Romulus, in his fondness for war, and believing in his descent from Mars, placed first the month that had been called after that god, while Numa, a man of peace, and anxious to engage the people in agriculture, gave the precedence to January again, and at the same time brought Janus into especial honour as the patron of politics and agriculture rather than of war. Perhaps, however, Numa rather adopted what seems to us the natural commencement of the year; for in fact there is no true beginning nor end to that which comes round perpetually; though some arbitrarily assign one beginning, others another. The most rational way certainly is to make the year commence after the winter solstice, when the sun, having ceased to go further away from us, turns and comes back again towards us.' Again, in § 34, he says, on the authority of Cicero, 'that Decimus Brutus was so impressed with the propriety of appeasing the Manes at the end of the year, that he offered inferiae in December, while all others did so in January.' We learn from v. 423—425, that before the institution of the month February, offerings to the Manes were commonly made. Varro, L. L. vi. § 13, says, 'Duo decimus mensis fuit Februarius, viz. on the notion that the month ought to have come last which was devoted to the dead. January therefore, as Ovid states, began the year, and February concluded it so that there was an interval of ten months between the two which now follow each other closely. This seems to be the meaning of v. 53, 54. Merkel, however, p. lxxviii. thinks differently: 'Tempora sunt dies prid. Kal. Febr. et Kal. Mart. spatium est menstruum,' i. e. March followed January, which were afterwards separated (postmodo distantia) by February coming between. This appears somewhat harsh.

50. Termine.] The Terminalia Feb. 23, was the last of all the feasts in the year, so that there was a kind of omen in the name.

51. quia janua, &c.] Rather, because Janus was the god of opening.

54. bis quini viri.] The Decemviri sacrorum, or keepers of the Sibylline books? Or the ten commissioners so called, who were appointed to draw up a code of laws in 449, B.C. According to Merkel the latter.

56. dicitur aucta] The temple itself had long ago fallen into decay so that dicitur refers to some record or tradition. Both Cybele and Juno Sospita had a temple on the Palatine. Ovid takes occasion to compliment Augustus for his zeal in

Nunc ubi sint illis quae sunt sacrata Kalendis

Templa deae? longo procubuere die.

Caetera ne simili caderent labefacta ruina,

60

Sub quo delubris sentitur nulla senectus:

Proque tua maneant in statione domo.

Tum quoque vicini lucus celebratur Helerni,

Inque Jovis summa caeditur arce bidens.

Saepe graves pluvias adopertus nubibus Auster

restoring the sacred edifices which had been neglected during the civil wars,—a zeal, we may perhaps surmise from Sueton., Oct. § 29, 30, arising from a desire to beautify the city at least as much as from piety to the gods. On this temple Merkel refers to Livy xxxiv. § 53.

59. Caetera] ‘Retulerim ad aedes sacras potissimum montis Palatini restitutas, quas ipse Augustus in mon. Ancyra. tab. l. dextr. (i.e. the records of Augustus’s life, a copy of which was discovered at Ancyra in Asia Minor), nominat: aedem Juventutis aedem Matris Magnae in Palatio feci.’ (Merkel, p. cxxix.)—ducis, Augusti.

65. caelestibus,] i. e. caelestium templis. This idiom is common both to the Greeks and Romans,—θεοῦ ἐγχωρίου πορθεῖν, πῖμπρά-ναι, &c.

66. in statione] The metaphor is taken from the post of sentinels. See ver. 719.—pro tua domo, either ‘before,’ or ‘in defence of,’ which however amounts to the same thing.

67. Helerni,] The MSS. give

Averni or Asyli. The conjecture of Heinsius seems unquestionably right. Inf. vi. 105, ‘adjacet antiqui Tiberino lucus Helerni.’ The word is probably connected with ἔλος. It seems to have been near the mouth of the Tiber, as the following verse indicates. Vicini therefore means, not urbi, but ei loco qua petit, &c.—celebratur, ‘is crowded with worshippers.’—advena Tiberis, inf. iii. 524. Propert. v. l. 8; ‘advena Nilus,’ inf. v. 268. The notion was that the river, or river-god, visited different places in its course.

70. Jovis arce] The Calends were sacred to Juno, i. 55, to whom a sacrifice was offered both in the Capitol and the Regia (‘penetrale Numae,’ inf. vi. 264), or residence of the Pontifex. But on this particular day there was also a sacrifice to Jupiter Tonans, who had a separate temple on the Capitol. To this Propertius alludes, v. l. 7, ‘Tarpeiusque pater nuda de rupe tonabat.’ It was built by Augustus. Suet. Oct. § 29.

74. purpureis] Reflecting the glowing tints of sunset; whence also 'gemmea juga.' The setting of Lyra and the middle star of Leo had been recorded i. 654—656. How far this also is true ('non longe a veritate,' Merkel, p. lxxvii.) astronomers will explain, for the commentators do not.

79. caelatum], 'distinctum,' 'ornatum stellis.'—seu fuit, 'seu quod fuit,' &c. He was changed into a star either because he acted as internuntius when Neptune was courting Amphitrite, or because he carried Arion safe to shore. The beautiful story about Arion is from Herod. i. 24.

83. Quod mare] 'Quis and quid merely ask for the name, but qui and quod inquire respecting the kind, condition, or quality of the person or thing.' Varronianus, p. 320. 'Quis casus means what chance? but qui casus would mean which chance?' (Ib. p. 321.) 'In our idiom, quod mare answers to "what sea?" quid mare is scarcely good Latin; the former implies that there are several seas, the latter could only occur in some such question as, "what do you mean me to understand by sea?"'

85. a voce] Another reading is hac voce. The rule, that the ablative of the agent requires the preposition, that of the instrument rejects it, is, like most rules, not universally true. We have 'laqueo nodatus ab arcto,' Remed. Am. 17; and conversely 'augure doctus,' Propert. i. 13. 13. See sup. i. 416.

88. in saxo] There is a reading, and a more poetical one, though perhaps a correction, infestae.—leae for leaeae is rather a rare word; it was used by Varro (frag. 2), who was contemporary with Cicero. There are two Greek forms, λέων and λις, but only a feminine λέαινα, for λεάνια. By omitting the n, leaeae became leaea, and was finally shortened to leu.

95. Inde] He was sailing from Tarentum to Methymne in Lesbos, and carrying with him the proceeds of his skill (opes quaesitas arte).

100. conscia] 'In the conspiracy.'

107. pallam ;] This was the proper dress of the citharoedus. Hence Propert. iii. 23. (ii. 36.) 16: 'Pythius in longa carmina veste sonat.' Tibull. iii. 4. 35, of the vision of Apollo: 'ima videbatur talis illudere palla.' It was a kind of upper tunic, and was perhaps furnished with a train (syрма), like that of actors. See Hor. A. P. 215. Becker, Gallus, p. 438.—bis tinctam, which was the most precious of the several varieties of sea-purple. See Gallus, p. 446.

110. Trajectus penna tempora] 'Having its head pierced with an arrow.' Penna for sagitta, as the Greeks use πτερόν. The death-note of the swan was considered peculiarly sweet and plaintive. Thus Heroid. vii. 1:—

'Sic, ubi fata vocant, udis abjectus in herbis,
 Ad vada Maeandri concinit albus olor.'

The origin of the mistake has been pointed out on Aesch. Ag. 1419.

113. recurvo] The traditional way of painting the dolphin, as if doubled up, or arching its back in the water, is said to be contrary to nature. Keightley remarks that the porpoise will follow a boat in which there is music. This is very likely the case, as it will also follow a boat in which there is none.

121. sacras Nonas.] The nones were not generally sacred (i. 57), but on this month that day was kept in commemoration of the title Pater Patriae being conferred on Augustus, A. U. 752. Hor. Od. i. 2. 50. Suet. Oct. § 58: 'Patris Patriae cognomen universi repentino maximoque consensu detulerunt ei: prima plebs, legatione Antium missa; deinde, quod non recipiebat, incunenti Romae spectacula frequens et laureata; mox in curia senatus, neque decreto neque acclamatione, sed per Valerium Messalam. Is, mandantibus cunctis, Quod bonum, inquit, faustumque sit tibi domuique tuae, Caesar Auguste, —senatus te, consentiens populo Romano, consalutat PATRIAE PATREM.' It was considered the first honour that could be bestowed on a citizen, which Augustus was fond of being called. Hence Ovid uses such strong words, deficit ingenium, &c.—alterno pectine, elegiac verse; cf. 126.

128. nos eques] i. e. 'equester ordo.' Ovid was of this rank by birth. Inf. iv. 383. Trist. iv. 10. 7:

'— usque a proavis vetus ordinis heres,
Nec modo fortunae munere factus eques.'

The rank was about equal to our 'Esquire,' in its legal sense.

133. facit magna] Merkel, p. cclv., explains this of the enlarging the pomoerium and assigning the regiones or districts of the city, A. U. 747. See Tac. Ann. xii. 23. Suet. Oct. § 30.

135. parvi Cures.] The sense is,

Tu breve nescio quid victae telluris habebas ;
 Quodcumque est alto sub Jove Caesar habet.
 Tu rapis, hic castas duce se jubet esse maritas ;
 Tu recipis luco, reppulit ille nefas. 140

though Romulus conquered the Sabines, they were but a small horde within a few miles of him. See on 475 inf.

138. castus maritas ;] This alludes, as also the well-known ode of Horace, iii. 6, to the attempts of Augustus to check the growing profligacy of Rome, and by encouraging virtuous marriages to ensure a supply of legitimate children to the state. Sueton. Oct. § 34: 'Leges retractavit, et quasdam ex integro sanxit, ut sumptuariam, de adulteriis et de pudicitia, de ambitu, de maritandis ordinibus.' See ibid. § 44, and Propert. ii. 7. 1.

140. recipis luco,] i.e. nefastos implied in nefas. Romulus was said to have collected a crowd of vagabonds for his new city, without making particular inquiries as to character. Juven. viii. fin. :—

'Et tamen, ut longe repetas longaque revolvās

Nomen, ab infami gentem deducis asylo.

Majorum primus quisquis fuit ille tuorum,

Aut pastor fuit, aut illud quod dicere nolo.'

See Virg. Aen. viii. 342. Inf. iii. 430.

142. domini nomen,] Not that Romulus claimed this title in particular, but that Augustus disclaimed it. Suet. Oct. § 53: 'domini appellationem, ut maledictum et opprobrium, semper exhorruit,—dominumque se posthac appellari nec a liberis quidem aut nepotibus suis, vel serio vel joco, passus est.' He rejoiced in the title of princeps senatus, having the shrewdness to avoid an invidious name that he might more fully secure the reality of sovereign power. See on ver. 570.

143. incusat,] 'Had reason to reproach with cruelty.' Inf. iv. 841, seqq.—patrem, his adoptive father Julius. 'Mars deified Romulus, Augustus decreed divine honours to Julius Caesar.' The whole comparison is rhetorically drawn out, and ingeniously made to tell in favour of Augustus.

153. Custodem Ursae] The constellation Arctophylax, or Bear-Ward, also called Bootes, the chief star being Arcturus or Cynosura, iii.

107. The distinction between the Great Bear or Waggon and the Lesser Bear, which seem to revolve at a fixed distance from each other round the pole star, is well given in Mr. Long's note on Caesar, B. G. i.

13TH.

Idibus agrestis fumant altaria Fauni,
 Hic ubi discretas insula rumpit aquas.
 Haec fuit illa dies, in qua Veientibus arvis 195
 Ter centum Fabii ter cecidere duo.

178. turpes] Both 'turpis' and 'foedus' properly mean 'ugly' or 'unsightly'; but 'turpis' is ugly, from being ill-formed as to features, &c., while 'foedus' is 'disgusting,' as one marked with wounds or blemishes. The words are sometimes mere synonyms, as Virg. Aen. x. 832, 'sanguine turpantem capillos,' and ib. xi. 86, 'pectus foedans pugnis;' but sometimes they seem to be distinct, as Martial, viii. 79. 1:

'Omnes aut vetulas habes amicas,
 Aut turpes vetulisque foediores.'

186. gemuit;) The bear growled, having no other way of expressing parental affection. But the boy mistook it for ferocity, and would fain have killed it.

191. saevit adhuc] 'To this day Juno continues her resentment.' The notion is, that the bear never rests from its pursuer, as it never sets.

194. insula] See on i. 291; v. 289. The temple of Faunus was dedicated (says Keightley), the same year as that of Jupiter, near to which it stood. Merkel, referring to Livy xxxiv. 53, remarks that Vitruvius (3. 1) appears to speak of them as one, 'hujus exemplar est in insula Tibercina in aede Jovis et Fauni.' By adding ubi rumpit aquas the poet shows that the end of the island is meant, where it first meets the current.

195. Haec fuit illa dies.] Merkel (p. lxii.) has pointed out the poet's error in confounding the day on which the Fabii left Rome with that of their defeat, which was the same as the disastrous battle at the Allia, July 16, A. U. 277. See sup. i. 58. Livy vi. 1. The improbability of the legend has long been asserted; and later research has given it a somewhat different character. The reader may consult Arnold's Hist. of Rome, i. pp. 171 and 216—218. It was doubtless a constant theme of that early ballad-poetry which

Sumunt gentiles arma professa manus ;
Egreditur castris miles generosus ab isdem,

E quis dux fieri quilibet aptus erat.

Carmentis portae dextra est via proxima Jano ;

Ire per hanc noli, quisquis es, omen habet.

[Illa fama refert Fabios exisse trecentos :

Porta vacat culpa ; sed tamen omen habet.]

Ut celeri passu Cremeram tetigere rapacem,

Castra loco ponunt ; destrictis ensibus ipsi

Macaulay has discussed in his 'Lays of Ancient Rome.' The following is from Smith's Classical Dictionary : 'According to the legend, the consul Kaeso went before the senate and said, that the Fabii were willing to carry on the war against the Veientes, alone and at their own cost. Their offer was joyfully accepted, for the patricians were glad to see them expose themselves voluntarily to such dangers. On the day after Kaeso had made the proposal to the senate, 306 Fabii, all patricians of one gens, assembled on the Quirinal, at the house of Kaeso, and from thence marched with the consul at their head through the Carmental gate. They proceeded straight to the banks of the Cremera, where they erected a fortress. Here they took up their abode along with their families and clients, and for two years continued to devastate the territory of Veii. They were at length destroyed by the Veientes in 477 (B.C).'

198. gentiles manus ;] The warriors of one and the same gens.—professa, 'volunteered.' Those are said 'profiteri nomen' who give in their names for any specified service.

199. castris ab isdem,] They did not meet from different quarters at one trysting place, but left the city in one body. Castra is perhaps the spot before the house of Kaeso.

201.] This verse is obscure. The MSS. give dextra ; Gierig reads dextro from the conjecture of Heinsius. The sense seems to be, 'There is a passage through the Carmental gate, next to the temple of Janus : that passage is unlucky ; take the other on the left.' See on i. 257. The Fabii went out of Rome by the Carmental gate, which had two archways ; and they took that on the right. Merkel, p. cxlix., 'aliis religio fuit circa totam Carmentalem portam et templum Jani, quod erat extra eam ; aliis circa dextrum tantum portae fornix.' Livy ii. 49, 'infelici via dextro Jano Portae Carmentalis profecto ;' where dextro Jano means dextra fornix. Keightley reads dextro, and explains it thus : 'the nearest way to go out there is by the right-hand Janus of the Carmental gate.' He denies that there was any temple of Janus near the Carmental gate. See Arnold, Hist. of Rome, i. p. 52 (note). Merkel quotes the clear testimony of Festus, p. 285. 5, 'religioni est quibusdam porta Carmentali egredi et in aede Jani, quae est extra eam,' &c.

203, 204.] These verses are wanting in some of the MSS., and are enclosed in brackets in most of the recent editions. The internal evidence seems rather in favour of their genuineness. Merkel omits them, with the oldest and best MS.

207. loco] This may mean illico, 'on the spot' (i. e. close to the Cremera, which was an inconsiderable stream near Veii). But locus sometimes has the sense of καίρος, sc. 'locus opportunus,' as Hor. Ep. i. 7. 57, 'properare loco.' We may therefore translate, 'in a fit position.'

208. Tyrrenum] The same as Tusco in 212. The ancient writers, as remarked in Varronianus, p. 14, generally confound two really different nations.

217. In medio] A similar manoeuvre is recorded by Q. Curtius, viii. l. 4, 'Namque hostis in silvis, quae erant forte campo junctae, armatum militem condidit: paucis propellentibus pecora, ut improvidum ad insidias praeda perduceret. Itaue incomposito agmine, solutis-

219. torrens] 'Quaecunque ferunt seu calore seu motu et impetu, dicuntur et ipsa torrere. Ita tandem flumina torrentia sunt ferentia, rapida.' Heyne on Virg. Aen. ix. 105.

224. Quodque vident sternunt,] i. e. 'quod pecoris,' &c. There is another reading, 'quosque vident, spernunt;' and in the next verse 'male creditur.'

237. Herculeae gentis.] The Fabian house, one of the most ancient in Rome, claimed its descent from Hercules and Evander. On the cognomen Maximus, see i. 606.

242. cunctando] Q. Fabius Maximus, surnamed Cunctator, from his policy of thwarting Hannibal by watching his movements but avoiding to fight. He was Dictator B.C. 217.

243. Continuata loco] 'Cohærentia nullo intervallo.' Gierig.

246. tam sociata.] Good MSS. give the vulgate, consociata. Ovid may have written as Merkel has edited it ; but tam refers to quality or degree, and is used with adjectives ; sic to manner, and rather belongs to participles or verbs.

250. tenuem] Keightley understands 'light and clear.' Rather, 'a little water,' viz. so much as the crow could lift. Thus Virg. Georg. iii. 335, 'tum tenues dare rursus aquas,' where the context points to this sense.

256. Dum fierent] The fig is said to turn soft very speedily. — dum for donec. When used to express an event in expectation, without reference to its having actually happened in the writer's time, the subjunctive is regularly found, as iv. 755, 'dum degrandinet,' 'till the hail is over.' Aen. x. 809, 'dum detonet,' 'till the thunder of war has passed.' So also in conditions, as Hor. Od. iii. 3. 37, 'Dum longus inter saeviat Ilion Romamque pontus.' Propert. iii. 18. (ii. 26.) 47, 'latices dum ferret,' 'on condition of getting water.' When dum refers not to a transient point of time while an event is in progress, but to the duration of it, the imperfect is sometimes used, contrary to a rule given in most grammars. Thus the Romans say, 'dum haec loquitur, supervenit (perf.) Consul:' but Aen. viii. 374, 'dum bello Argolici vastabant Pergama reges.' Propert. v. 10. 33, 'dumque aries murum cornu pulsabat aheno.' Mart. ix. 49. 4, 'dum nova, dum nitida fulgebat splendida lana' (sc. toga). See sup. i. 199. When dum means quandiu. in reference to future time, it takes the future indicative, as inf. 263, 'dum haerebit.'

260. tenuit i. e. detinuit officium. See on iii. 113.

264. bibentur aquae.] There was a popular notion that rooks never drank water before the figs began to ripen in autumn. Pliny x. 12, § 15, 'Corvi—aegrescunt sexagenis diebus, siti maxime, ante quam fici coquantur autumno.'

268. Fauni bicornis] In common with other poets, Ovid makes this Italian god identical with the horned Pan of Arcady. Whether the Lupercalia were indigenous or imported, i. e. whether or not there is any truth in the legend that they were brought by the Arcadians, or, in other words, the Pelasgi, the rudeness and coarseness of the rites indicate a remote antiquity. Their apparent connexion with phallic ceremonies is an argument for their eastern origin. For an account of the festival see Dict. of Antiquities, and notes to Propert. v. l. 25. It partook of an expiatory character. Varro says, L. L. vi. § 13, 'nam et Lupercalia februatio, ut in antiquitatum libris demonstravi.' (Sup. 19.) Augustus is said to have restored the Lupercalia after they had fallen into disuse. Sueton. Oct. § 31.

273. Pholoë.] A mountain to the west of Arcadia, in which the river Ladon took its rise.

 Ipse deus nudus nudos jubet ire ministros :
 Nec satis ad cursus commoda vestis erat.

276. Cyllene,] Most of the MSS. give Troezenē. Merkel has edited from conjecture Triorene. Cyllene was a mountain sacred to Hermes, and not to Pan, and is therefore suspicious. But the poet may have meant to enumerate a few of the places in Arcadia which were metrically convenient.

277. equarum ;] The feminine gender, though common in speaking of animals generically, perhaps indicates that incolumes means 'safely producing young.' Aquarum is the reading of most copies; and Pan was worshipped as a god of the shore, Aesch. Pers. 451; but this attribute is here not to the purpose.

280. Hic ubi, &c.] He means to say, 'transtulit secum ante Romam conditam.'

281. Pelasgis :] i. e. the Arcadians.

282. erit.] 'Henceforth we shall have the Flamen Dialis (priest of Jupiter) to officiate at the Lupercalia, as heretofore.' This office had been abolished, but restored by Augustus, as Merkel thinks (p. cxiv.), in connexion with the festival. The Flamens were instituted by Numa, according to Varro, L. L. vii. § 45, who elsewhere (v. § 84) derives the name from filum, quasi Filamines, 'quod in Latio capite velato erant semper, ac caput cinctum habebant filo.' See inf. iii. 397. Plutarch agrees with this, Quaest. Rom. § 40, τὸν πῖλον, ἀφ' οὗ καὶ Φλάμεν κέκληται.

286. subitas fugas.] Those sudden alarms which we still call 'panics.' Some read concitat ille feras.

287. nudos] They were naked except a sort of leather apron round the loins. Plutarch, Quaest. R. § 68, describes them as γυμνοὶ διαθέοντες ἐν περιζώμασι. Without doubt decency was barely consulted. See on v. 101. Propertius uses the term 'licens Lupercus.' The poet assigns three reasons for this dress or undress:—(1) Pan himself scampers about the hills, and clothes are unsuited to running; (2) the primitive men wore pelles, skins of beasts; (3) above all (ver. 303), Faunus dislikes garments because he was once tricked by them (ver. 357).

290. Luna prior] See i. 469.—

agitata, &c., 'acta sine ulla experientia, sine inventis commodis.'

298. Ibat ovis] The wool was not shorn to be made into togas, &c.

301. detecti] Luperci scil., veste deposita. — opes, 'resources,' i. e. the small means and the few comforts.

305. dominae] Omphale, to whom he was sold as a slave, and who was therefore domina in more than the usual amatory sense, though it seems in this also. She is called Maeonis (310), because queen of Lydia.

309. humeros perfusa] See on i. 407.

310. aurato sinu.] The stola had a strip of gold below the neck, corresponding to the laticlave in the male tunic. See v. 28. Becker, Gal- lus, p. 435. Heroid. xiii. 32, 'Nec libet aurata corpora veste tegi.' But even the men sometimes wore tunics embroidered with gold threads. Virg. Aen. x. 818 : 'et tunicam, molli mater quam neverat auro.'

311. umbracula] The use of the umbrella is very ancient. There is a representation of one in the Assyrian sculptures (Layard's Nineveh, p. 334); and an engraving is given in the Dict. of Antiquities, where it is observed that it was a common attention of lovers to hold a parasol over a lady. Here, perhaps, Hercules performed the office rather as a slave.

313. Tmoli vineta] The scene, therefore, is in Lydia; and yet the Italian Faunus is introduced. So completely was he at this time identified with Pan.

315. tophis] 'Tufa,' a volcanic product resembling hardened mud. Pumex, silex, and perhaps adamus, meant basaltic or other volcanic rocks.

318. instruit] The object of changing clothes is not stated. But it seems to have been on purpose to counteract the anticipated attempts of Faunus. Compare 307 with 344.

321.] There were two ways in which the tunic and its accompanying zona failed to fit him: first, it was too small round the waist; secondly, the sleeves would not allow his hands to pass through, without being unclasped, or, as we should say, 'let out' to a man's size. This passage will be better understood by a reference to Becker's Gallus, p. 433. The stola, or outer tunic, was in the poet's mind, though properly he should have described the Greek χιτών. Both, however, had sleeves reaching to the elbows, and were gathered up by clasps or brooches on the outer side. These sleeves were called manicae (Aen. ix. 616). See on i. 409. Tenues (319) applies to the fabric, which was sometimes of silk, or a texture resembling our muslin.

323. Fregerat] This may either mean 'he would have broken,' i. e. had he tried them on, or 'he had already broken the armlets, which were too small for him, and was trying to wear the sandals.'—vincula. See inf. v. 432.

326. tela minora] 'Arrows stored in their own quiver.' Minora, sc. gravi clava. The commentators strangely misunderstand this verse; though Heinsius had rightly explained minora. Hercules is regularly armed with a club and a bow, in poetry if not in pictures.

334. soporis idem.] Compare 'idem officii,' i. 46.

337. captata] 'Groped for,' i.e. which he had tried to discover by feeling his way.—felix prima sorte, 'he was destined to be lucky as far as his first success went.' Merkel reads forte from only one MS., though the best.

342. rettulit] The reduplication of t, commonly called a poetical licence, is really due to the omission of e from retetulit. Catullus has 'si reditum tetulisset,' lxxvi. 15. For fero borrows its perfect from the root of tollo (Varronianus, p. 397), which is properly 'to lift from its place for the purpose of bringing,' like ἀφαιρῶ. Thus we find reppulit for reperulit in 350, and repperit for repeperit in v. 200. Another theory is, that re for red (as red—do, red —eo) became long by compensation for the dropped d. See Varron. p. 258.

345. sponda] See Becker, Gallus, p. 291, where it is shown that the lectus had a raised side called pluteus, the position near to which was the interior torus, while sponda was the outer side, nearest to the person about to ascend, called prior or propior torus. Propert. iii. 8. 4: 'fractus utroque toro,' i.e. 'jactando corpus in utramque lecti partem fatigatus.'

359. peregrinis] Having given a Greek legend, he adds an Italian one to account for the scanty dress of the Luperci, and at the same time for their division into two classes or fraternities, called Quintilii and Fabii, after the followers of Romulus and Remus respectively. Propert. v. l. 26 : ' unde licens Fabius sacra Lupercus habet.' The variety of causes often assigned by Ovid in explaining certain customs may be accounted for by supposing that he compiled from several annalists.

367. Vectibus] 'Throwing the bar.' Gierig reads caestibus, but includes the distich in brackets. Merkel thinks the repetition of dabant in consecutive pentameters merely shows that the passage had not been finally revised. According to his punctuation, 'they were doing this, when a shepherd cried out,' &c.

370. et Reme,] Gierig has eripe.

380. quod bene cessit,] 'The success of the enterprise,' i.e. though they ran out without arms and almost without clothes.

381. locus ille] The Lupercal was a cave on the east side of the Palatine, said to have been the den of the wolf which suckled the foundlings (inf. 421). It was consecrated to Pan, and kept up, like the 'casa Romuli' and the 'ficus Ruminialis' (412), till Ovid's time. Virg. Aen. viii. 343 : 'gelida monstrat sub rupe Lupercal, Parrhasio dictum Panos de more Lycaei.' See inf. 423. It was from this cave that the Luperci started, after a sacrifice, to run through the city.

ther of Numitor, who was the father of Ilia or Silvia.

389. Tiberin] The real meaning of the word is unknown. Another way of writing it was Thybris, whom Virgil (Aen. viii. 330) describes as a king who succeeded Saturn. This form may possibly point to ὕβρις, which is sometimes used of rapid streams, and may also be traced in Θύμβρις. But in Varronianus, p. 171, it is derived from Pelasgian roots meaning 'hill-river.'

391. Fora] The Forum Romanum and Forum Boarium, both adjacent to the low part of the city known as the Velabrum. See inf. vi. 405, seqq.; Propert. v. 2. 7, and ib. 9. 5. The latter word was commonly derived from velum.—valles, that between the Aventine and Palatine hills, where the Circus Maximus stood.

393. Huc ubi venerunt,] Ovid supposes the twins to have been exposed close to the spot where they were landed by the subsiding of the flood. Gierig says that in this he followed Fabius Pictor the old annalist. According to others, they were launched in the Anio, near Alba, and so carried down to the site of Rome. See on 597.

398. Nescio quem vobis] Merkel, with the best copies, gives e vobis, i. e. 'nescio uter vestrum deus sit.' This, to say the least, is unusual Latinity. The next verse is rather in favour of the vulgate, which means, 'I suspect you have some god (for your father).' It had been remarked that one had more of vigour than the other; and it would be strange to add, 'I know not which of you is a god.'

401. si non, &c.] Unless he were otherwise engaged at the time in assisting the mother. Keightley remarks that the agency of the gods was supposed to be confined to one place at a given time.

403. sub undas] This should Vagierunt ambo pariter; sensisse putares.

Hi redeunt udis in sua tecta genis;

Sustinet impositos summa cavus alveus unda.

Heu quantum fati parva tabella tulit!

Quis credat pueris non nocuisse feram?

mean, that they were to be drowned; but deposuit sinu (fluvii) and alveus (407) show that they were exposed in a sort of cradle which would float. The fact is, it was intended that they should soon, but not immediately, sink; for in this way the ancients pretended to avoid the odium of a direct and wilful murder; as when they buried vestals alive with a small supply of food.

405. Vagierunt] There is a reading vagierant. The vulgate may be scanned as a trisyllable, though this is not necessary. Lucretius even begins a verse with pueri, iv. 1023. Nearly the same verse occurs Heroid. xi. 85: 'vagitius dedit ille miser; sensisse putares.'

411. vestigia,] Not remains of the actual tree, which had long left the spot, if indeed it ever stood there, but as Merkel contends (p. cl.) a record of it preserved in a bronze group, representing the event, which was placed there. And so he understands the words of Livy, i. 4: 'ubi nunc ficus Ruminalis est.' It must be confessed that this is doing some violence to the language. But the passage in Tacitus is explicit, Ann. xiii. 58: 'eodem anno Ruminalem arborem in comitio, quae octingentos et quadraginta ante annos Remi Romulique infantiam texerat, mortuis ramalibus et arescente trunco deminutum prodigii loco habitum est, donec in novos fetus reviresceret.' Where Ritter observes: 'Prisca ficus Ruminalis ad Lupercal fuit in radicibus montis Palatini, sed in comitium sponte transisse credebatur.' —Respecting the reading of this verse there is also some doubt. Merkel edits: quaeque vocatur Romula non ficus, Romula ficus erat, —which is nearly unintelligible. Keightley says it means, 'the one which was then so called was not the real tree.' The MSS. vary between non and nunc (a common confusion), and Rumina and Romula. Ovid says this in simple ignorance what Rumina meant. It is, however, doubtless the genuine name of the tree, and not a corruption of Romula. It means 'the tree of the wolf's dug.' Dr. Donaldson, Varronianus, p. 60, and before him Plutarch, has remarked that raumu is the Latin or Lithuanian term for a dug or udder. See Quaest. Rom. § 57: Διὰ τί τῆ Ρουμίνα θύουσαι, γάλα κατασπένδουσι τῶν ἱερῶν, οἶνον δ' οὐ προσφέρουσιν; ἢ βούμαν Λάτινοι τὴν θηλὴν καλοῦσι, καὶ Ρουμιάλιν ὀνομασθῆναι λέγουσιν, παρόσον ἡ λύκαινα τῷ Ῥωμύλῳ τὴν θηλὴν παρέσχεν; From this old root comes 'ruminare,' 'to chew the cud,' i. e. 'to provide milk for the udders;' and it is possible that the Rammes (Ramines?) may be referred to the same origin.

413. lupa feta] 'A she-wolf with young,' τοκάς. Feta means 'having young;' whether as yet born or not, is immaterial. We may assume that she had already lost them, and sought relief by letting the twins take their place. Nor is there any thing violently improbable in the event, or any just cause why we should treat a 'constans fama' as an absurd invention, or explain Lupa as the name of a woman.

418. fingit] This word properly signifies 'to give shape to any pliant material;' as to squeeze clay or wax, σφίγγειν. Compare fallo and σφάλλω. Hence it is correctly used of a creature which assists the development of newly-born limbs by 'licking them into shape.' Horace has 'fingitur artibus,' of a young girl taught to dance. In Ep. i. 2. 64, 'fingere equum' is said of a trainer who, as it were, moulds the horse to his will. Inf. iii. 670, 'fingebat liba' is 'made cakes of soft dough.' Cf. v. 409; Virg. Aen. viii. 635; Georg. ii. 407: 'Persequitur vitem attondens, fingitque putando,' 'prunes it into the proper shape.'

420. Nec sibi promissi] Others read et sibi permissi. This use of nec should be noticed. Generally it disjoins negative clauses; but here its negative sense is exerted, not on the whole clause, but on one word in it, i. e. 'et aluntur ope lactis non sibi promissi.' So Propert. iii. 20. (ii. 28.) 52: 'Vobiscum

Europe nec proba Pasiphaë,' for 'et improba.' Martial iv. 3:—

'Indulget tamen ille Jovi, nec vertice moto
Concretas pigro frigore ridet aquas,'

i. e. 'et non moto vertice,' &c.

423. Quid vetat, &c.] 'And yet they may have been called after Pan, worshipped in Arcadia as the wolf-god.' See Georg. i. 16. Lupercus is probably from lupus and arceo, and thus has the same meaning as Λυκοῦργος, Λυκοεργός, from λύκος and εἶργειν. There is no doubt that λύκος and lupus are identical, through the medium of the lost κόππα or letter Q. See Varronianus, p. 251. Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 68: ἡ λύκος μὲν ὁ λοῦπός ἐστι, καὶ Λύκαια τὰ Λουπερκάλια; The Luperci, then, in their origin, were the priests of the god who keeps the wolves from the sheep, whether Pan or the similar but not identical Faunus. But it is curious to notice the confusion of ideas and the accumulation of attributes which characterized the later worship. In part the Lupercalia were expiatory, in part, probably, phallic, besides being connected with the preservation of Romulus and Remus. As the word involved lupus, it was naturally connected with the nutria lupa of the twin foundlings.

427. fecundae dextrae ;] The blows of the goat-skin straps carried by the Luperci (inf. 446), which were supposed to make women prolific. The adjective is used in an active sense, by a common idiom, the principle of which is that to possess and to impart to others are correlative ideas.

433. mea injuria] The rape of the Sabine women.—vires, 'multitudinem civium.' Gierig.—nurus, 'uxores.'

436. Junonis] She was the goddess of marriage, and therefore fitly appealed to.—lucus. 'The site of the lucus and the temple of Juno Lucina, on the Esquiline, is uncertain. It has long been thought that the temple was close to the present church of Sta. Maria Maggiore, and that the rows of marble columns in the interior of that church had belonged to that ancient temple. But there is no proof of this ; and from the order of the Argean chapels it might rather seem that it is to be sought on the part of the hill over the Subura and the Via Urbana.' Keightley. Merkel, p. cxxvii., shows from Pliny that this temple was dedicated A. U. 379.

449. Lucinae :] Juno, as well as Diana, had this title, from bringing children at their birth into the light of day. Hence the poets often speak of 'the darkness of the womb,' as Aesch. Eum. 635. See note on Suppl. 660, and Varronianus, p. 148. Inf. iii. 255. Varro, L. L. v. § 69.

Both goddesses are indeed connected with the moon, and both preside over births, ten moons being the period of gestation. But Lucina does not seem to have been derived from the brightness of the moon, as Plutarch thought, Quaest. Rom. § 77, καὶ Λουκίαν Ἥραν καλοῦσιν οἶον φαεινὴν, ἢ φωτίζουσαν, καὶ νομίζουσιν ἐν ταῖς λοχείαις καὶ ὠδῶσι βοηθεῖν, ὥσπερ καὶ ὀκοῦσι, much less from lucus, as Ovid rashly suggests. Keightley denies that Juno Lucina was the Moon. See, however, on i. 55 ; vi. 39.

453. fuerit ;] See on i. 315. The meaning is, that about the time of the Lupercalia a few days of unsettled weather commence.

457. obliqua] 'Tilted,' so as to discharge its contents ; such was the imaginary figure of this sign.—equos, &c. The sun enters Pisces.

459. juncta] They are represented as tied together by a string.

461. Dione,] Venus, who was, properly speaking, the daughter of that goddess. Hom. Il. v. 370. But the epithet Dionaea seems to have been confounded with Dione. The curious and rare legend here recorded is probably of Semitic origin. Typho is better known in Egyptian mythology as the pursuer of Osiris. See Herod. ii. 156 ; Strabo xvii. 1 ; and Aesch. Suppl. 554. In Met. v. 331 it is said that Venus was changed into a fish when followed by Typho into Egypt. This appears to have been derived from some other source.

464. Palaestinae] i. e. Syriae. The term seems anciently to have comprised Syria, to which the sources

474.] 'He here confounds Venus with the Derecto or Atergatis of the Syrians, who abstained from fish, as that was the form of their goddess. Lucian. de Dea Syr. 14.' Keightley. Xenophon, Anab. i. 4. 9, says that the Syrians worshipped certain fish as divinities, and would not allow them to be injured.

475. vacua] Without any mark of a festival.—dicta Quirino. This appears to mean 'sacred to Quirinus,' not 'called after' him. The feast of the Quirinalia falls on this day. Why Romulus obtained a Sabine name it is not very important to inquire; perhaps Quirinus was at first the Eponym or mythic hero of the Sabine population. From quiris, or curis, 'a spear' (a Sabine word, on which see Varronianus, p. 106), came the names of two towns, Quirium and Cures, the former (supposed to be) a settlement of Sabines on the Quirinal and Capitoline hills, the other the metropolis of the Sabine territory, but sometimes, as here and Propert. v. 9. 74, used for the Sabines generally. Quirites occurs only in the plural; but Cures (—etis) in Propert. v. 4. 9. All these words are etymologically connected with κούρητες, 'the warriors.' Hom. Il. xix. 193.

481. Nam] In reference to 'dicta Quirino,' sup. 475.

483. habet vires; &c.] 'Romana potentia satis corroborata est, neque adeo diutius filii mei officio indiget.' Gierig.

486. Pro se, &c.] 'Instar duorum mihi erit.' Gierig.

487. Unus erit] This verse, attributed to Ennius, and quoted by Varro, L. L. vii. § 6, with the addition of templa, gives the very words of Jupiter's promise to Mars: 'unus erit (sc. non autem duo) quem ego tollam in coelum.'

490. movit] 'Shifted,' as a burden galling to the shoulder. The other reading, sensit, is more poetical.

- Est locus ; antiqui Capreae dixere paludem.

 Et patrias artes militiamque colant.
 Jussit, et in tenues oculis evanuit auras.
 Convocat hic populos, jussaque verba refert. 510

491. Capreae paludem.] This was a piece of wet ground in the Campus Martius, of which no particular account has been preserved. — jura dabas. See on i. 37.

496. Fit fuga ;] A sudden storm was thought a sufficient reason, both by the Greeks and the Romans, for dispersing a legislative assembly. ‘Comitiorum solum vitium est fulmen,’ Cic. de Div. ii. 18. 43. Ovid seems to have had in mind the Comitia centuriata, rather than the C. curiata, though the former was attributed to Servius Tullius. While the people fled Romulus was taken up to heaven, so that none were witnesses of the miracle. Hence arose a suspicion of foul play on the part of the patres, till his re-appearance assured the discontented multitude.

499. veniebat Alba,] The preposition is not necessarily added with eo and venio, to denote the place either from or to which a journey is made. Thus Ep. ex Pont. iii. 2. 79: ‘qua vos tamen urbe venistis?’ Inf. v. 651: ‘desertis venerat Argis.’ Propert. iv. (iii.) 16. 1: ‘nox media, et dominae mihi venit epistola nostrae Tibure.’ Ib. iii. 14. 20: ‘infelix, hodie vir mihi rure venit.’ The change of the order in the nomen and cognomen in Julius Proculus, for the sake of the metre, is rather remarkable.

501. sepes tremuere] The common reading is nubes crepuere. The MSS. present many varieties, and the text is rather uncertain. One does not expect to hear of ‘hedges’ at such a time and place. May sepes bear an allusion to the septa in the Campus Martius? (i. 53.)

503. trabea] See on i. 37.

505. lugere] Supra, 497. Like πενθεῖν the word is properly used of mourning, and is very different from dolere.

Curio legitimis nunc Fornacalia verbis

512. certi dies.] The Quirinalia were fixed for the 17th of February ; whereas the Fornacalia, which was sometimes kept on that day, was properly a moveable feast (feriae conceptivae, inf. 528), celebrated before the Quirinalia. Those persons who had not attended to the notice given by the Curio Maximus were allowed to make up for their neglect by sacrificing to Fornax on the 17th, which for that reason was called the 'Feast of Fools;' and is here mentioned in connexion with the Quirinalia.

520. farra] The repetition of the word implies 'far, and nothing but far (spelt).' That is, they had no wheat (triticum) or barley (hordeum), though the latter cereal is thought to be indigenous to Sicily. The processes of sowing and drying the grain (see on i. 693 ; vi. 313) were alike unscientific, till at length an improved system was placed under the patronage of a new goddess, Fornax.

523. nigras favillas ;] The grain was almost calcined, like the malt now used for colouring porter.

526. temperet] i. e. regulate the heat of the stove.

527. Curio Maximus] The curiae, or subdivisions of the original tribes into wards, contained only the burghers or patres, to the exclusion of the plebeians. Each curia had its Curio, who superintended the sacred rites common to the members of his ward ; but all these Curiones, thirty in number, were under the general authority of a president of the college, called, by way of distinction, Maximus. On this occasion it was his duty to proclaim in the Forum on what day the Fornacalia would be kept. In the Augustan age the division of the populus (ver. 531) into curiae was little more than nominal, so that the careless or uninformed hardly knew in what curia they were enrolled.

Maximus indicit, nec stata sacra facit ;
 Inque Foro, multa circum pendente tabella,

 Parva petunt Manes : pietas pro divite grata est

530. certa nota ;] This seems to mean that a mark was set to each curia denoting the day and hour on which they were to attend, and implies that not all the curiae kept it at once. Hence Varro rightly says, L. L. vi. § 13 : 'Quirinalia a Quirino, quod ei deo feriae et eorum hominum qui Furnacalibus suis non fuerunt feriat.' (Merkel, p. clvi., expresses his surprise at suis, 'quasi non omnium eadem fuerint Fornacalia.') Plutarch, Quaest. R. § 89 : διὰ τί τὰ Κυρινάλια μωρῶν ἑορτὴν ὀνομάζουσιν ; ἢ ὅτι τὴν ἡμέραν ταύτην ἀπεδεδώκεσαν τοῖς τὰς αὐτῶν φρατρίας (i. e. curias) ἀγνοοῦσιν, ἢ τοῖς μὴ θύσασιν, ὥσπερ οἱ λοιποὶ, κατὰ φυλάς ἐν τοῖς Φορνηκαλίοις δι' ἀσχολίαν ἢ ἀποδημίαν ἢ ἀγνοίαν, ἐδόθη τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ταύτῃ τὴν ἑορτὴν ἐκείνην ἀπολαβεῖν ; (i. e. referre, ver. 532; cf. i. 618.) Keightley seems wrong in supposing the plebs are spoken of; populus is used in its strict sense in 530, or rather in the sense which it bore in Ovid's time, viz. the citizens in general.

533. paternas.] In this word he alludes to parentalia, and in ferite to Feralia. The former were the offerings, the latter the festival in commemoration of the departed. But inf. 548 we have 'Parentales dies,' meaning perhaps those immediately preceding the day of the Feralia. This notion of 'laying ghosts,' or giving relief and repose to restless spirits, seems to be widely spread among all races of mankind. The Anglo-Saxons had their 'month's mind,' or particular services for the departed on the 30th day after decease, a practice kept up throughout the middle ages. The Romans, indeed, who could hardly realize the idea of any future existence except in a bodily form, thought rather of offerings to the Manes than expiatory sacrifices for them; indeed, they had vague notions of punishment after death, though Keightley wrongly denies (Excursus iv. p. 233) that they were acquainted with the doctrine. They regarded ghosts as endowed with corporal feelings and wants, and brought offerings to them of food (inf. 566). It is curious that this latter practice is not wholly unknown among very ignorant people; an instance has been given to the present editor, in the case of a poor woman who for many years brought plates of meat and dishes of tea to her husband's grave!—exstructas pyras, 'i. e. tumulos, the places where the funeral pyres had been, and which had burned out.' Keightley. There is another reading extinctas, which perhaps he intended to explain. The epithet in either case is little more than a poetical addition. Offerings of meat (dapes) were brought to be thrown on the pile when burning (Virg. Aen. vi. 225); but these must be understood differently from 540 inf.

536. avidos deos.] This looks like some confusion of ideas. He meant

Et sparsae fruges, parvaque mica salis, Inque mero mollita Ceres, violaeque solutae.

to say that the Manes were satisfied with little ; but he here seems to talk of propitiating the infernal deities. Or are dii the Manes themselves, who are sometimes called 'dii Manes' and 'dii inferi?'

537. porrectis] 'Offered,' i. e. held out for acceptance on the tegula. The common reading projectis has less authority. Cf. 652. There is reason to believe that these material offerings were merely ceremonial, and of the shabbiest sort. Hence Juvenal compares a bad dinner to them, 'exigua feralis coena patella,' v. 85.

539. solutae.] Not made up into a chaplet, but scattered loose.—testa relicta. The platter, or scrap of crockery, was 'left in the way,' because the donor must retire before the ghost would eat the offerings.—via alludes to the road-side graves.

542. positis focis.] The notion of worship was almost inseparable in the Roman mind from the erection of altars. See iv. 334.—sua verba; i. e. 'propria,' 'solemnia.'

545. patris Genio] The ceremonies in commemoration of Anchises are described at length in Aen. v. Keightley says that genius is here incorrectly used for Manes, since the former belonged only to living persons. But Merkel (p. ccxxxii.) more accurately distinguishes between the genius of the living, the 'anima cujusque rationalis,' and the guardian spirits more or less identified with the Lares. See inf. 631.

550. rogis.] From that neglect (omine ab isto, sc. deserendi) there was an increase in the mortality of the city. The literal sense is, that Rome itself felt the heat of the numerous piles lighted outside of the walls.

555, 556.] The omitted rites having been resumed, the extraordinary deaths and the portents ceased. The Manes were not only restless themselves, but they caused a public calamity, as possessed of a power beyond that of merely deceased human beings. He thus proves the importance of parentalia by a two-fold argument.

557. puellae ;] This word is not unfrequently applied to young married women. As a general rule, widows did not marry on feriae publicae, though maidens might do so. Plut. Quaest. R. § 105 : ἐν ταῖς δημοσίαις ἑορταῖς ἔθος οὐκ ἔστι γαμεῖσθαι παρθένους, αἱ δὲ χήραι γαμοῦνται. But the days of the Feralia were religiosi, unlucky for any marriages ; one reason of which was, that the fax thalami and the fax mortis were to be kept quite distinct, and not even lighted from the same source. See on Propert. v. 3. 13, and compare inf. v. 487. The expression puri dies implies that the time itself was in a manner polluted and unfit for a ceremony of a nature so different.—pineu taeda, ‘the nuptial torch ;’ taeda is properly a piece of split pine wood, and is connected with δάς, δάδος, which bears the same sense, Od. xviii. 310. So ‘flamma per taedas equitavit,’ Hor. Od. iv. 4. 43. Cf. Virg. Ecl. vii. 49 : ‘taedae pingues,’ i. e. firewood. Bearing this in mind, we may readily understand ‘ferro faces inspicat acuto,’ Georg. i. 292 ; ‘faces incidere,’ Ecl. viii. 29 ; and ‘faces comminere,’ inf. v. 508.

560. Comat] The symbolical parting of a virgin’s hair with a spear-point, on her marriage, was probably intended to signify that the wife was to share the fortunes of war as well as of peace. Plutarch, Quaest. R. § 87, asks διὰ τί τῶν γαμουμένων αἰχμῇ δορατίου τὴν κόμην διακρίνουσιν ; and suggests several reasons for the custom ; as that it was a reminiscence of the old times when wives were carried off by force of arms ; that the spear was sacred to Juno, the goddess of marriage ; that the nuptial knot could be undone by iron alone, &c.

563. celentur] ‘Ne dii ad aspectu tristi polluerentur.’ Gierig. This practice is still preserved in the covering up of all pictures and statues during the most solemn time of Lent. The Romans closed their temples altogether on this and the similar occasion of the Lemuria, inf. v. 485.

568. pedes] All the good MSS. give dies, which has no satisfactory meaning. Merkel reads vices on his own conjecture, referring it to the number of places in an elegiac distich in which the feet are variable ; but Keightley with good reason objects to this as forced and artificial. If the Feralia began on the 15th of the Calends of March, and continued till the 9th, or Feb. 21, from this latter to the end of the month eight days remain. Ovid uniformly speaks of a plurality of days for these ceremonies, as ver. 548. 567. 570, and Kal. Mart. ix. is marked in the ancient 'Tabula Maffiana' as the Feralia, or last day. Now the number of feet in an elegiac distich is not eight, but eleven, or at least ten, not reckoning the long syllables in the pentameter. But Gierig states that another old Calendar, which he does not specify, places the Feralia on the 12th of the Calends, which is just eleven days before the end of the month. Perhaps the easiest way of reconciling contradictory accounts is to suppose that the first day remained fixed, but the last varied at different times according to the number of days it was found convenient to devote to the ceremonies.

569. Feralia] Elsewhere the e is long, as inf. v. 486: 'ut nunc ferali tempore operta vides,' and sup. 34. This indeed is the usual quantity of the word. Compare the ē in Feronia. But Varro, L. L. vi. § 13, agrees in the derivation from fero:—'Feralia ab inferis et ferendo, quod ferunt tum epulas ad sepulcrum, quibus jus ibi parentare.' It will be observed that he gives two distinct derivations at once, as in the passage quoted on i. 322. It is clear from the present distich that only the last day was properly called the Feralia. See sup. 533.

572.] Tacita, or Dea Muta (583), was not only the mother of the public

Lares, but also, as the name implies, the goddess who suppressed and averted evil words. Now evil words, like the 'evil eye,' fascinatio, seem to have come within the peculiar province of magic rites. Hence the subject is introduced by describing an old beldam and her maids engaged in incantations.—nec tacet, i. e. she mutters audibly certain charms.

575. plumbo;) Some MSS. give limbo, bombo, or rhombo; and the last seems probable, though it has very slight authority. The epithet refers to the dull grey colour of common lead. Keightley says 'black lead;' but it would be absurd to suppose that the rare substance graphite is meant.—cum means, 'ita ligat ut connectatur cum plumbo.' The Romans usually say 'ligare ex,' or 'ab aliqua re.' Most MSS. give tenet, so that the reading in the text is doubtful.—licia were properly 'threads having at one end a loop, through which a thread of the warp was passed, the other end being fastened to a straight rod' (Dict. of Antiq., art. Tela). But Ovid probably means 'threads' generally, which were cantata, 'charmed.' See Virg. Ecl. viii. 77; inf. iii. 267. On the use of beans in magic see inf. v. 436.

578. maenae] This is the conjecture of Heinsius, the readings of the MSS. being corrupt. Some small and common fish is meant, and the name is in allusion to Mania,

Vina quoque instillat; vini quodcumque relictum est, or Genita Mana (Plutarch, Quaest. R. § 52), also called Larunda,—the same as the Dea Muta, for Manes and Lares were undoubtedly closely connected. The action, as Keightley observes, is plainly symbolical. 'The silence of fishes is well known; and it was made still more so, if possible, and then put in the fire, to show, as it were, that no force could make it break silence.' The 'bronze needle,' acus, was an important instrument in magic rites. Cf. Amor. iii. 7. 30: 'et medium tenues in jecur urget acus.' Sticking pins and needles in their victims was one of the charges brought against witches in quite recent times.

579. instillat ;] Propert. v. 3. 60; Heroid. xix. 151, and ib. xiii. 114.

581. Hostiles] 'Maledicas.' See

585. Juturnae] See i. 463.

597. annuerant] Gierig reads annuerunt. See sup. 405. For udae the MSS. generally give undae.—Ilia diva. Ilia, the mother of Romulus, is represented sometimes as the wife of the Tiber; sometimes as here, of the Anio. See Hor. Od. i. 2. 17. Amor. iii. 6. 45. This discrepancy throws some light on ii. 393; for a river nymph may well be confounded with the mother of twins exposed on either the one or the other of those streams.

599. Lara] The original name was Lala (λαλαειν, compare Lalage); but the l, as in many words, was changed into r. So κόραξ and κόλαξ are converted into an occasion of joking by Aristophanes. Lara, however, is really connected with Lar.

Proxima cognati dixere Caristia cari,

601. Ex vitio] From her fault of tale-telling.—Almo is here the god of the river, and father of Lara; for the Nymphs of diverse streams were called together. Sup. 589. It was an inconsiderable tributary of the Tiber, south of Rome. See iv. 337.

603. Juturnae stagna] Merkel thinks this was in the Campus Martius, and different from the spring in the Forum, i. 708. It may be doubted if any real place is meant.

605. nuptas,] If the plural is right, the sense is general, 'after expressing her condolence with the lot of the married.' The common reading is nuptam. Other MSS. give nympham, nymphae, or nymphas.

615. geminos] The Lares Praestites or Compitales (v. 129), the public guardians of the city, as opposed to the Lar familiaris of private houses, were generally enshrined two together, from some supposed connexion with Romulus and Remus. The worship of the Lares was originally Pelasgic; but the Romans seem to have derived it from Etruria. See Varronianus, p. 151. Hertzberg, on Propert. iii. 3. 11, mentions a 'Lar tutanus,' which is perhaps not from tueor, but the Umbrian word tuta, 'a city,' on the analogy of oppidanus, paganus, urbanus. See Varron., pp. 84 and 93. For in urbe Gierig reads in aede, supposing that both public and private Lares are meant. The singular is rather objectionable for in aedibus; and the best MSS. are against him.

617. Caristia] Though the word is Greek (Χαριστία or Χαριστεία), and only indirectly connected with carus, from which Ovid seems to derive it, the best MSS. agree in the Latinised form. This festival was instituted as a kind of set-off to the gloomy solemnities of the season just passed. It was a thanksgiving for surviving relatives, and was especially devoted to the interchange of endearments, and to the reconciliation of alienated friends. A very similar custom exists in France and Canada

Scilicet a tumulis et qui periire propinquis

on New-Year's day. It is not generally marked in the ancient Calendars, and was probably but little attended to. Gierig quotes Valerius Maximus, ii. 1: 'Convivium etiam sollemne majores instituerunt, idque Caristia appellaverunt, cui praeter cognatos et affines nemo interponebatur: ut, si qua inter necessarios querela esset orta, apud sacra mensae et inter hilaritatem animorum, fautoribus concordiae adhibitis, tolleretur.' The socii dii are the Penates, and only mean a 'family meeting.' Inferior MSS. have dapes.

623.] As such meetings were intended to promote love and charity, those persons could have no part in them who had given proofs of cruelty and hatred to their nearest relations. He proceeds to adduce instances of unnatural conduct, such as Atræus, Medea, Philomela, and Procne. The formula used is that of the invitation to attend sacrifices, to the exclusion of the impious.

625. vivax.] 'Long-lived.' The word always implies an unusual tenacity of life, and is applied to plants, as 'vivax apium,' contrasted with 'breve liliū,' Hor. Od. i. 36. 16; to animals, as 'vivax cervus,' Virg. Ecl. vii. 30; to those persons who outlive the usual term of years, as 'vivax Sibylla,' inf. iv. 875, or even to infants which resist attempts to procure abortion, Heroid. xi. 43. Compare Hor. Sat. ii. 1. 53: 'Saevae vivacem crede nepoti Matrem: nil faciet sceleris pia dextera.' The poet here means that the man whose father is too long-lived, and who counts the years his mother may yet survive, is a parricide at heart, and therefore no fit guest for the Caristia, even though he has committed no actual crime.—digerit Gierig refers to the consultations with astrologers, who were a common pest at Rome in the Augustan age.

628. semina tosta dedit.] This was Ino, or Mater Matuta. See on vi. 556, and on iii. 853. The origin of the legend will appear from the note on i. 693.

631. Dis generis bonis;] There was an old adjective manis or manus, 'good,' whence immanis, and Manes, 'the good spirits,' or ἀγαθοὶ δαίμονες, as the Greeks called them, on the principle of propitiating them by good words, just as our countrymen used to talk of 'Robin Goodfellow.' From the latter form, manus, we have 'Genita Mana,' the 'Good Mother' (sup. on 578). See Varroianus, p. 148. Varro, L. L. vi. § 4: 'bonum antiqui dicebant

Et libate dapes, ut, grati pignus honoris,

Nutriat incinctos missa patella Lares.

Jamque ubi suadebit placidos nox humida somnos, 635

manum. In this passage, the Lares are meant; for the 'Lar familiaris' was regarded as the author, protector, and good genius of every family. There was no clear distinction between them and the Manes, or spirits of ancestors departed.

633. libate dapes,] Both these words, as well as patella in the next verse, have a peculiar and technical sense. On the first see inf. 653.—dapes differ from epulae, as being offerings of meat, &c., made for a religious purpose, e. g. to Lares, tombs, or the gods at a sacrifice; and patella is the dish on which they were offered. Inf. vi. 310: 'fert missos Vestae pura patella cibos.' Juven. v. 85 (quoted on 540 sup.). Cic. de Fin. ii. 7: 'reperiemus asotos ita non religiosos ut edant de patella.' It was the custom in the old times, when the family dined in the atrium, to offer a piece of meat to the Lar as an acknowledgment of the plenty and prosperity which were attributed to his protection. — incinctos. The Lares were dressed in the peculiar Latin garb called 'cinctus Gabinus,' which was an antique way of wearing the toga. Plutarch says their dress was of dog-skin, Quaest. R. § 51. Persius, v. 31, calls them 'succincti Lares.'

637. Bene vos, &c.] The construction is, 'dicite vos, Bene te (valere optamus), Caesar optime, pater patriae.' Merkel well observes, p. cclx., that this must have been written in the lifetime of Augustus. Cf. Hor. Od. iv. 5. 33—36. Tibull. ii. 1. 31: 'sed, Bene Messalam, sua quisque ad pocula dicat.' — per, i. e. inter. Merkel gives ter from the conjecture of Heinsius. The MSS. vary between per, post, in, sint; and many of them give sacra for bona.

639.] The Terminalia, one of the primitive Italian festivals. It is marked TER in the 'Tabula Maffeana' (given by Merkel, p. xii.), against Feb. 23. The Romans appear to have purposely, and ominis gratia, celebrated this at the end of the year (see on 49 sup.); for when there was an intercalated month they took from February the days remaining after the 23rd, and added them to that month. Varro, L. L. vi. § 13: 'Terminalia, quod is dies anni extremus constitutus; duodecimus enim mensis fuit Februarius, et quom intercalatur, inferiores quinque dies duodecimo demuntur mense.' For reasons stated below, it was probably found expedient to maintain this festival in its integrity, even to the latest, as one of the principal safeguards of landed property.

642. numen habes.] i. e. 'coleris.' Some place the comma after antiquis.

Te duo diversa domini pro parte coronant,
 Binaque sarta tibi, binaque liba ferunt.
 Ara fit: huc ignem curta fert rustica testa 645
 Sumptum de tepidis ipsa colona focis.
 Ligna senex minuit, concisaque construit alte,
 Et solida ramos figere pugnat humo;
 Tum sicco primas irritat cortice flammas:
 Stat puer, et manibus lata canistra tenet. 650
 Inde, ubi ter fruges medios immisit in ignes, Porrigit incisos filia parva favos.

 Spargitur et caeso communis Terminus agno; 655
 Nec queritur, lactens cum sibi porca datur.
 Conveniunt celebrantque dapes vicinia simplex,
 Et cantant laudes, Termine sancte, tuas.

643. diversa] 'Lying in opposite directions.' See on i. 132. 283. 'Duo domini, agrorum utrumque possessores, te coronant, uterque in parte agro suo obverso.' Gierig.—bina does not here mean 'two apiece,' but simply 'duo.'

645. testa] This is the reading of by far the greater number of good MSS., and is in itself as probable as testu. The latter form is rare, and is said to occur only in the ablative. See v. 510. The fire was brought in a 'cracked pot'—or rather, one without a handle—from the domestic hearth; for the Romans made it a point to light every flame belonging to a religious ceremony from a lucky source (Propert. v. 3. 14).

648. solida humo;) A row of stakes was stuck in to confine the smaller faggots on the top of the rustic altar. Woodcutters still adopt this plan in piling billets. The altar, as remarked sup. 542, was an essential part of the proceeding.

649. irritat] Not 'fans it,' but 'feeds it,' as the epithet sicco implies.—canistra, κάνειρον, a sacrificial utensil, to hold the various articles required. It was flat and wide (lata), and had nothing but the name in common with our can and canister.

653. libantur singula] 'A portion of each is taken to throw in the flames.' See on i. 587; inf. iii. 734; v. 627. The word in its proper sense means 'to take a taste of any thing,' and does not closely correspond to λείβειν. Thus the bee 'sips the stream,' 'flumina libat,' Georg. iv. 54. So Aen. i. 256: 'oscula libavit natae.' Hence generally 'to offer a first portion,' ἀπάρχεσθαι. Inf. v. 627; vi. 163. For this purpose the honey-combs are described as already cut across, incisi.

654.] 'The company dressed in white look on in silence.'

655. caeso agno;) This is contrary to the testimony of Plutarch, Q. Rom. § 15, who suggests reasons why the Romans, τὸν Τέρμινον θεὸν νομίζοντες, οὐδὲν ἔθουον αὐτῷ ζῶον. Gierig thinks that a living victim was a subsequent usage, and refers to Hor. Epod. ii. 53: 'et agna festis caesa Terminalibus.' Numa, who instituted the Termini, regarded them as guardians of peace and justice, and therefore not fit objects for bloody offerings.

660. litigiosus] ‘The subject of law-suits.’ Properly, ‘addicted to litigation,’ as ‘fora litigiosa,’ iv. 188. Compare vinosus, religiosus, pecuniosus, &c. In the earlier times of the republic, agrarian disputes between plebs and populus were so numerous, and the inclination of the powerful to encroach on the weak so strong, that the sanctity of the Termini was a matter of the first importance.

663. Thyreatida terram,] This was a territory common to the Argives and Spartans, and the subject of the well-known contest between 300 champions on each side, described by Herodotus, i. 82, whom the poet has evidently followed.

665.] The MSS. read tectus. Lectus is the conjecture of Barth, adopted by Merkel and most of the later editors. Othryades was the Spartan champion who alone survived on his side, and raised a trophy on the spot from the spoils of the enemy, on which he wrote his name as conqueror, and was therefore ‘read on the piled arms.’ See Plut. Par. § iii. The two Argives who had escaped with their lives ran off to announce the supposed victory of their countrymen. Othryades afterwards killed himself on the spot.

666. quantum sanguinis] For the battle was renewed between the two nations in consequence of his claiming the victory.

667. Capitolia ?] When the temple of the Capitoline Jupiter was about to be constructed by Tarquinius Priscus, the older shrines and altars which occupied the spot were cleared away. An old stone—a long-forgotten terminus—was dug up (inventus), and allowed to remain in the new temple with Jove. Keightley connects inventus in aede, and explains it, ‘in the place selected for its site.’ Gierig reads conventus, sc. ‘cum ad eum convenissent augures,’ on the ground that the different deities were asked and consulted as to their willingness to leave the spot. The passive participle may be defended, as convenio takes the construction of a transitive verb (see on iii. 673), but it is supported by very few MSS. There is no difficulty in inventus. The action described was as natural as it would be for us to preserve in a new church any old sculptured fragment discovered in digging the foundations.

672. foramen] ‘Servius ad Aen. ix. 448: “unde in Capitolio superna pars tecti patet, quae lapidem ipsum Termini spectat: nam Termino

673. levitas] Locomotion. When Terminus was not disturbed to make room even for Jove, much less ought he to budge at the solicitation of any mortal wight. There was much of policy in paying this extraordinary honour to Terminus. The people learned to regard every boundary-mark with superstitious awe. There is, in truth, something in the very nature of unprotected property which strongly appeals to a man's innate sense of honesty. Many a one will rob an orchard who would scorn to take a single potatoe from the exposed heap of his neighbour.

678.] Most MSS. give tuus est hic ager ille suus. The common reading is meus est hic ager, ille tuus. But it has very slight MSS. authority. One may be allowed to entertain some misgivings whether suus is good Latinity, if it means ‘clamato alteri, suum esse hunc agrum, alteri vero, “ille tuus est.”’ It may rather signify, ‘This field is its own property, not your’s.’

679. Est via.] Keightley refers (after Gierig) to Strabo, v. p. 357 : Μεταξὺ γούν τοῦ πέμπτου καὶ τοῦ ἕκτου λίθου τῶν τὰ μίλια διασημαινόντων τῆς Ῥώμης καλεῖται τόπος Φῆστοι τοῦτον δ' ὄριον ἀποφαίνουσι τῆς τότε Ῥωμαίων γῆς, οἱ θ' ἱερομνήμονες θυσίαν ἐπιτελοῦσιν ἐνταῦθά τε καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις τόποις πλείοσιν ὡς ὀρίοις ἀθημερὸν, ἣν καλοῦσιν Ἀμβαρουίαν, adding, ‘It would hence appear that they sacrificed to Terminus at the Ambarvalia. We have met with no mention of a place named Festi ; and Strabo does not say on what road it lay.’ It is clear that it was the traditional boundary of the ancient ‘ager Romanus ;’ whence the remark which follows, that now the limits of the empire are those of the world, i. e. the outer ocean both on the east and the west. The question may fairly be entertained, whether the sacredness of the Termini did not originate from their public or national use in separating rival principalities, rather than from their merely private importance. Yet even the Jewish law contained a stringent prohibition against removing a neighbour's landmark.

686. nomina] The day was called ‘Regifugium,’ and was ‘nefastus,’ i. e. very solemnly observed.

690. Gabios] A Latin town between Rome and Praeneste, once very flourishing, at this time nearly deserted: 'et qui nunc nulli, maxima turba Gabi.' Propert. v. l. 34. See Livy i. 53.

691. Namque] This explains the 'turpis ars.' Sextus, the youngest, some say the eldest, son of L. Tarquinius Superbus, is called proles manifesta, because he showed by his deeds, viz. by this affair of the capture of Gabii, and the subsequent tragedy of Lucretia, which cost his father the throne, that he was one 'nomine quem simili vita superba notat,' himself a second Superbus. Propert. iv. 11. 48. — manifestus (manus) is properly what is known to be real by the touch, though we use the word in reference to the test of eyesight.

699. tueatur bella,] This means more than 'carry on the war' (Keightley); rather, 'that he would undertake the war in concert with them.' It is clear from what follows, jamque potens, that he had secured to himself the chief authority. Varro, vii. § 12: 'tueri duo significat, unum ab aspectu, ut dixi, unde est Enni illud: Tueor te senex, pro Juppiter. — alterum a curando ac tutela, ut cum dicimus Bellum tueor, et tueri villam.'

711. Ecce, &c.] There is some abruptness which the student should not overlook. The narrative about Gabii is now concluded; a second and quite distinct anecdote is next recorded, in order to introduce the name of Brutus, the author of the Regifugium; then the siege of Ardea, which gave occasion to the cause of it, the rape of Lucretia. In these the odious character of Tarquinius Superbus is made to appear through the conduct of his sons, and particularly that of the youngest; in truth, the object was rather to extirpate the house of Tarquin than to drive out the individual. The Regifugium, the poet implies (ver. 713, 714), was sanctioned by Apollo, who had foretold that none of the sons of Tarquin, Sextus, Titus, and Aruns, should succeed to the throne.

715. suae] This is emphatic: herein was the error, for Terra Mater was really meant, which the pretended idiot Brutus alone had the sense to perceive.—quisque and turba refer only to Titus and Aruns, for the other son Sextus had his own principality at Gabii. See the story in Arnold, Hist. Rome, i. chap. vii.

721. Ardea] A Rutulian town, fabled to have been founded by Danae, Virg. Æn. vii. 411, and considered as one of the oldest in Italy. See Livy i. 57.

725. Tarquinius juvenis] i.e. Sextus. The guests consisted of the other two sons of Superbus, Titus and Aruns, and their cousin Tarquinius of Collatia.

728. arma referre] On the return of a soldier from a victorious expedition his arms were often suspended as an offering in the temple of Mars, near the Porta Capena. Propert. v. 3. 71.

729. in officio] 'In fide, fidelis,' Gierig.

735. Nox superest :] ‘There is night enough remaining,’ i.e. it is not too late to see how our wives are employed in our absence. The brevity of the narrative adds much to the effect. The poet hastens to the catastrophe ; yet he finishes with care his very touching and exquisite portrait of Lucretia.

740. mero.] For a Roman matron to drink wine was thought scarcely becoming, and a proof of luxus. Dr. Arnold’s remark on the contrasted character will, in fact, apply to this : ‘The simple habits of Lucretia seem copied from the matrons of the republic in the time of its early poverty, and cannot safely be ascribed to the princesses of the magnificent house of the Tarquinii.’ (Hist. of Rome, i. p. 93.) It is equally clear that the late banqueting, the chaplet, and the wine of the other are borrowed from the customs of a much later age.

746. lacerna] It appears from Propertius (v. 3. 18) that a military cloak was sent out every year, or at least every campaign, to the absent husband : ‘textitur haec castris quarta lacerna tuis.’

747. audistis ?] Merkel edits audistis, but against the majority of good MSS.—For potestis two inferior copies give soletis, which is the common reading. The meaning is, ‘you are in a position to hear more than I know about the prospects of the war.’

749. melioribus restas.] ‘You are opposing better men, and therefore must eventually fall. It is only a question of time.’ Restas for resistis, as Propert. iii. 7. (iv. 8.) 31 : ‘dum restat barbarus Hector.’—improba, &c. The idea is, ‘We wish you no luck for causing the absence of our husbands.’

755. in lacrimas.] This is a 757.] pudicam is the reading of the best MSS. Pudicae seems rather more poetical.

779. agitatus] Merkel reads agitatur. The other has equal authority, and is much less abrupt.

782. Viderit,] It is not very clear what is the nominative. Perhaps, 'is qui hoc curat ;' for the phrase means 'ego non curo.' But it may also be 'forsve deusve,' 'let chance or Providence see to it, whether of the two it is that assists the bold.' So Virg. Æn. x. 744: 'ast de me divum pater atque hominum rex Viderit.'—ve—ve, for utrum—an, or sive—seu, is rare. See on Propert. v. 4. 55, and ib. 5. 20. Gierig has forsne deus juvet. The MSS. have juvat or juvant.

787. Collatini:] See sup. 733. Merkel edits Collatina, which has very little support from the MSS. In either case the house of Sextus' cousin Tarquin is meant. Collatia was a Sabine town; one of those taken by Tarquinius Superbus. The play on hostis and hospes is also found in Livy. See Varronianus, p. 206.

801. pugna] This is the common reading, and has two of the very best MSS. in its favour. Merkel gives pugnans, which is not nearly so poetical. There is also some uncertainty as to the pentameter. The ordinary editions have qui necet, ensis adest, which is better, but perhaps an improvement on the original.

807. per crimina,] i. e. per calumnias. The common reading is pro crimine, which is simpler, but has less authority. The sense seems to be, 'if you do not yield, I will not only take away a life, but I will attach to the murdered man a base suspicion. I will kill a slave, and give out that he was detected in your chamber.' Falsus naturally belongs to testis. 'False testimony shall be given to prove the crime, and that by the real culprit himself.' A few MSS. give erit.

824. adeo] if the reading is right, seems to mean 'non plane.' But Merkel prefers ideo with most MSS. Many give ad eos.

829. coactae.] Some MSS. give coacto, which would make this an instance of a rhyming or leonine verse.

833. honeste.] Eur. Hec. 568: πολλήν πρόνοιαν εἶχεν εὐσχήμως πεσεῖν. Gierig thinks this beautiful touch might have been spared, as somewhat hackneyed. But he disparages the whole of Ovid's account, as compared with that of Livy.

837. Brutus] The word seems to mean 'insensate,' from Horace's 'bruta tellus,' Od. i. 34. 9. It is not easy to assign a plausible derivation. Dr. Arnold (Hist. R. i. p.

105) connects it with βαρὺς, in the sense of 'gravis,' 'severus.' This can hardly be called a happy conjecture. Perhaps it has a common origin with βρώω, ῥυτῶς, and ῥέω, 'teeming' or 'teemed forth,' and was thus applied both to earth and animals.—fallit nomina, 'belies his name,' i.e. of idiot, by the noble spirit he displays.

841. Per tibi ego hunc juro] This dislocation of the construction is usual in similar formulae, and was meant to express excitement and incoherency.

850: regis facta nefanda] He relates all the bad deeds of the father, and adds this last one of his profligate son.

Both here and sup. 812 the father is not clearly distinguished from the son.

852. regnis] Regibus. Tarquin and his house being expelled, or the Etruscan yoke being shaken off, the Romans institute the annual consulship in place of the regal authority.

856. tuō frigore] i.e. 'frigidam te esse laetabitur.'

859. Equiria] The horse races in the Campus Martius. They were instituted by Romulus in honour of Mars; and as they preceded the games of the Circus, so they were kept up long after they had been eclipsed by the latter. See inf. iii. 819.

3.] 'If you ask what the god of war can have to do with poetry, I reply, the month which is my present theme is named from Mars.' He shows that conversely the goddess of the fine arts, and therefore of poetry, also has to deal with war.

7. Palladis exemplo] Compare inf. 176 and 683.

10. Cepit,] εἰλε, 'captivated,' Propert. i. l. 1. Silvia was not properly Romana but Trojana, or rather Latina sacerdos, since the event happened at Alba. Here, as in ii. 393, the poet seems to have been thinking of Rome, though not yet built.

11. Moveri?] See on i. 19. The account itself was probably borrowed from Ennius. Trist. ii. l. 259 :

'Sumpserit Annales, nihil est hirsutius istis, Facta sit unde parens Ilia nemp leget.'

19. obrepsit] Some MSS. have subrepsit, others subrepsit or surrepsit. The change of tenses is sufficiently common, as ii. 289 : 'fixit sua corpora telo Et cadit.' It is rather a question of harmony ; for there is studied cadence in these verses which suggests the idea of repose. The subject indeed is rather needless, repeated from ii. 383, seqq.

Mars videt hanc, visamque cupit, potiturque cupita,
Et sua divina furta fefellit ope.

Martia picus avis gemino pro stipite pugnant
Et lupa. Tuta per hos utraque palma fuit.

Dixerat: et plenam non firmis viribus urnam
Sustulit. Implerat, dum sua visa refert. 40

23. jam scilicet] Merkel reads nam. There is equal authority for the other; jam is required by the sense, while nam scilicet seems a very unusual combination.

29.] She describes what she has just dreamed: 'aderam, adesse videbar, ignibus Iliacis,' sc. the sacred fire of which she had the custody as a Vestal. —vitta. The absence of the vitta implied lost virginity. Tibull. i. 6. 67 (quoted on iv. 134, inf.), and ii. 5. 53.

31. Inde] It is not clear whether focus or vitta is meant. Perhaps the latter, as it lay on the ground, and had some fancied relation to the intercourse that had occurred. The beautiful comparison of a young person with the straight stem of the date-palm is first met with in Hom. Od. vi. 162. Ovid incorrectly calls the large pinnate leaves rami.

34. Contigerat] 'It had already reached the sky, when,' &c. Cf. inf. 204.—molitur, 'wields,' 'handles an axe.' Molari is like νοουάν, 'to set something in motion' with the idea of 'guiding and directing it to a particular end;' perhaps because the notion of building is inseparable from that of handling tools. Georg. iv. 331: 'validam in vites molire bipennem.' Q. Curtius has 'clauda et inhabilia navigia languide moliebantur,' i. e. 'managed,' ix. 9. 13. Virg. Aen. x. 131: 'molitur ignem,' 'wields the fire-brand.'

36. micat.] 'Palpitates.' Like corusco, the word is connected with the idea of quick, flashing motion, backwards and forwards; whence dimicare, 'to wave the sword,' 'to fight;' 'micat auribus,' Georg. iii. 84. See vi. 332.

37. picus et lupa.] According to the legend, a woodpecker brought food to the infants while the she-wolf suckled them: οὐ μόνον λύκαινα θηλήν ἐπεῖχεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὄρνκο- λάπτῆς τις ἐπιφοιτῶν ἐψώμιζεν, Plut. Quacst. Rom. § 21. Thus they

43. emeritis cursibus] 'With finished course.' See i. 665.—duo signa, 'duo menses,' i. e. two signs of the Zodiac. A rather complex expression for 'ten months had now elapsed.'

50. opes] i. e. regnum. Cf. iv. 280.

55. Larentia] The MSS with few exceptions give Laurentia, and inf. 57 Laurentulia. Plutarch writes Λαρεντία, Qu aest. R. § 35.—opes, sc. 'nutriendis pueris quaesitas.' The word is opposed to pauper, 'though poor in worldly goods, rich in reward and merit.'

58. Acceptus Geniis December] The merry festival of the Saturnalia occurred in that month, which, like our Christmas-tide, was the season of conviviality. The Larentalia are marked in the 'Tabula Maffeana' against the 23rd of December.

62. Iliadae] 'Sons of Ilia,' or, perhaps, 'descendants of Ilus' (vi. 419), for the patronymic rarely denotes the mother's side. 'Iliades' is used for 'Romulus,' inf. iv. 23.—jura dabant. See on i. 207.

64. actos] Abactus. See ii. 370, &c.

65. pater editus] 'The knowledge who was their father,' τὸ τὸν πατέρα γνωρισθῆναι, for Faustulus had hinted that their birth was divine.

70. Non expediit] 'It would have been better for Remus not to have leaped over them.' Inf. iv. 843.

74. pignora] By naming the month after his reputed father.—ducimus, &c. gives the terms of the pledge: 'we henceforth commence the year with March, so called after Mars.' Ducimus might mean 'we already commence with your festival,' i. e. the honour might have consisted merely in giving a new name to the month. The latter is rather supported by what follows; but the other seems in itself more probable. Cf. 97, inf.

79. Et tamen] 'Not but that,' &c. In the enumeration given below, Pelasgic tribes are especially mentioned in connexion with fine arts, legislation, and agriculture, and at the same time opposed to the aboriginal Italian tribes who were devoted to war. This passage confirms the well-known remark of Niebuhr, that the Roman terms of war do not exhibit a Greek root like those of husbandry. See Varronianus, p. 3.—studiis suis, i. e. 'non, ut postea Romulus, patris honori.'

84. Fauni.] See on ii. 267.

March was the third month, as at Rome after the time of Numa (i. 43). The facts here mentioned, which Ovid no doubt borrowed from the local Calendars (see vi. 61), are of some value to the ethnography of Italy, on which the reader should consult the introductory chapters of Varronianus.

94. turba Curensis] The Sabines. See on ii. 475.—A tribus primum, sc. quartum.

97. ordine saltem,] Not one of the above nations made March the first month in the year, so that Romulus could at least confer this peculiar honour on Mars.

100. minor, &c.] See on i. 27 and ii. 49.

101. victas artes] ‘It was precisely at the time at which the Roman people rose to unrivalled political ascendancy that they stooped to pass under the intellectual yoke. It was precisely at the time at which the sceptre departed from Greece that the empire of her language and of her arts became universal and despotic.’ Macaulay, Preface to Lays of Ancient Rome.—By artes the poet means especially astrology.

103, 104. Romanam artem;] ‘The art of the Roman was to fight well: the only eloquence he knew was the argumentum ad hominem of the javelin.’

106. sub axe] ‘In fine utroque axis.’ Gierig.

107. Cynosura] The lesser bear, κυνὸς οὐρά. See on ii. 153. Cic. de Nat. D. ii. 41. Trist. iv. 3. 1:—

Helicen, ‘Ἑλική, from εἰλεῖν or ἕλλεσθαι, ‘to revolve,’ is the Great Bear, which being somewhat remote from the pole star seems visibly to move round it. Inf. iv. 580. The subjunctives petatur and notet imply not the mere existence of the fact, but the ignorance of the Romans respecting it.

109. Signa,] i. e. Zodiaca. They thought that the moon went round

Libera currebant et inobservata per annum

the earth in a month, and the sun in a year; and that both bodies, pursuing nearly the same course, traversed the same constellations. Lucret. v. 617:—

‘Lunaque mensibus id spatium videatur obire
 Annua sol in quo consumit tempora cursu.’

112. constabat esse deos.] They did not indeed take any observations of the stars; but they all believed that they were gods with one consent.

113. non signa tenebant] There is a quibble or pun between tenere signa, ‘to understand the celestial bodies,’ and the same words in the sense of ‘to grasp the standards.’ See i. 217; ii. 260; inf. 857; v. 642. Gierig adopts movebant, a reading of some authority.

117. maniplos :] The primitive standard, under which the rustic armies of shepherds and reapers were ranged, was a wisp of hay on a pole. See Mr. Long’s note on Caesar, B. G. ii. § 25 (p. 119). Manipulus is properly ‘a handful,’ from manus and pleo, and seems to be the more correct form than manipulus. See Georg. i. 400. There is truth in Gierig’s criticism, ‘haec melius abessent, nihil enim ad rem pertinent, cum hoc unum moneatur, priscos Romanos astronomiae fuisse ignaros.’

120. lustra] If two months were wanting to each year, ten were deficient at the end of every five years. The old lustrum was therefore little more than four solar years. Of course the deficiency in the year, which would soon have thrown the seasons out of their course, must have been made up by intercalating. See on i. 27; inf. 163.

123. numerare] Juven. x. 249: ‘atque suos jam dextra computat annos.’

125.] We count 1, 2, 3, &c., up to ten, and then as it were begin again, 10+1, 10+2, &c. This is ingeniously expressed by a metaphor from the circus, in which the same ground (spatium) was gone over many times.

127. denos in orbes] i. e. into ten decuriae. ‘When the senate consisted of only one hundred members, there were accordingly only ten decuries of senators; and ten senators, one being taken from each decury, formed the decem primi who represented the ten curies.' Dict. of Antiq., in v. Senatus. It will be sufficient to refer to the same work for the treble arrangement of the manipuli into (1) hastati, originally, as the latter name imports, preceded by (2) principes, and (3) pilani or triarii. Each of these rows consisted of ten maniples or ordines, of which there were thirty in a legion. Ovid however seems to speak of the arrangement of a later age; for there appear to have been fifteen manipuli in each row before the time of Polybius, when the number was changed to ten (Dict. of Antiq. p. 593). Decem hastatos can hardly be understood except as decem ordines hastatorum. For patres, most of the MSS. give pares.

130. legitimo equo.] The horses of the Equites (Celeres?) were supplied at the public expense, or 'allowed by law.' The division of the cavalry into turmae and decuriae is here meant.—merebat, 'served,' i. e. stipendium, by a well-known ellipsis.

131. partes totidem] The members of the three tribes, consisting of Albans, Sabines, and Etrurians, were in like manner divided into curiae, gentes, and decuriae, after the decimal arrangement.

133. in anno.] 'In the case of the year,' i. e. in determining its length by the number of months. He made a point of not exceeding the popular and established number of ten, however incorrect and inconvenient it had proved to be.

135. Neu] 'Et ne,' where et forms no part of the parenthesis.—primae, sc. anni initium.

137. Laurea] Before the doors of the Flamens a bough of bay was fixed up on the first of March, and allowed to remain, like our royal oak boughs, till the same day of the next year. Merkel (p. lxxviii.) maintains that the ceremonies here alluded to (137—144) really took place on the 1st of March in reference to the expiatory rites (ii. 49) performed in the preceding month, February, and therefore are no argument to prove the poet's proposition.

139. Regis] sc. 'sacrorum' (ii. 21), whose house was on the via sacra, near the Regia, or abode of the Pontifex Maximus.—curia prisca. Keightley doubts what is meant by this, because the old senate-house, Curia Hostilia, was no longer in existence. He thinks therefore that the four 'veteres curiae' mentioned by Festus (in v. novae), may be meant. He is probably right; the singular is used from metrical necessity for curiae. Cf. iv. 635. These old curiae must be distinguished from the senate-house. Varro, L. L. v. § 155: 'Curiae duorum generum, nam et ubi curarent sacerdotes res divinas, ut Curiae Veteres, et ubi senatus humanas, ut Curia Hostilia, quod primum aedificavit Hostilius Rex.' And again, vi. § 46: 'Curiae, ubi senatus rempublicam curat, et illa ubi cura sacrorum publica; ab his curiones' (sup. ii. 527). Dr. Arnold (Hist. Rome, i. p. 31) thinks that the Curiae veteres stood on the site of the Baths of Titus. Ritter, on Tac. Ann. xii. 24, says, 'in eo loco, ubi montis Palatini pars ad orientem spectans excurrit septentrionem versus (arcus Constantini).' Festus, whose words are given in his note, describes them as erected by Romulus for the religious ceremonies of his thirty curiae, and adds that four of the old ones were allowed to remain when the others were pulled down as being too small. Their number seems to have been thirty.

144. Dicitur,] He could only speak from report, because the sanctum sanctorum was not open to public view. The ashes of the old fires probably formed in part the 'purgamina Vestae' of vi. 227.

146. Anna Perenna] An old name of the moon, explained inf. 523.

147. honores] i. e. the consular office. The real reason why it was originally assumed in March was because the refugium took place at the end of February. The time was afterwards changed to the 1st of January (i. 81), A. U. C. 601. But there were several intervening alterations, as Gierig proves from Livy.

148. perfide Poene,] Hor. Od. iv. 4. 49: 'perfidus Hannibal.' Livy, xxi. 4: 'perfidia plusquam Punica, nihil veri, nihil sancti, nullus deorum metus,' &c. 'Punica fides' became a proverb for 'perjury.'

150. quisquis] sc. mensis. See on ii. 49.

151. deductus] 'Escorted.' 'Verbum officii et honoris, ubi cum magno et splendido comitatu aliquem prosequimur.' Gierig. Numa was a native of the Sabine town Cures. This country was famed for its olives. Juven. iii. 84: 'nostra infantia coelum hausit Aventinum, bacca nutrita Sabina.' The 'old man of Samos,' Pythagoras, who brought into Italy the doctrine of Metempsychosis, with many other articles of the ancient Indian creed, was said to have been the contemporary and instructor of Numa, though it is more probable that he flourished in the time of Tarquinius Superbus. See Cic. de Rep. ii. 15. 28.—Egeria sua. Inf. 276.

156. Caesaris] Julius Caesar, who reformed the incorrect Metonic cycle, and established the system which continued up to our change from the 'old style' in 1752. Sueton. Jul. Caes. § 40: 'Annum ad cursum solis accommodavit, ut trecentorum sexaginta quinque dierum esset, et, intercalario mense sublato, unus dies quarto quoque anno intercalaretur. Quo autem magis in posterum ex Kalendis Januariis novis temporum ratio congrueret, inter Novembrem ac Decembrem mensem interjecit duos alios.' The year had got wrong by not less than two months, and the seasons were consequently quite out of order. The reader will find this rather complex subject fully and ably treated in the Dict. of Antiq., art. Calendar.

160. ignotas domos.] There is elegance and ingenuity in the compliment that Caesar wished to make acquaintance with the stars before he ascended to dwell with them as the 'Julium sidus.' Hor. Od. i. 12. 47.

161. moras solis.] 'Tempora, quibus sol in singulis Zodiaci signis moratur, post quae in primum signum revolvitur' Gierig.

163, 164. decies senos] He assigned 365 days and the fourth part of a day (tempora quarta) to a solar year, which is rather too much, the precise length being 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, and 49·7 seconds. This quarter of a day was represented by a whole day intercalated every fourth year (lustrum, sup. 120).

167—170. Si licet—Dic mihi.] 'If poets may expect secret intimations from the gods, tell me, O Mars, the origin of the Matronalia.'—officiis virilibus, 'the service of males,' i. e. the service paid by males rather than women (i. 5). Mars is connected with mas, as Ἄρης is with ἄρῆν.

184. Aspice] The 'casa Romuli' was still shown on the side of the Palatine. See on i. 199.

187. loco majus] Supra 66.

190. male credebar] i. e. 'parum, vix credebar.' This use is more common with adjectives, as 'male forte,' sup. 102; 'male sanus,' 'male fidus,' and 'male pinguis,' Georg. i.

105. 'Male creditis' has a somewhat different sense, ii. 225. The meaning is, the Romans had no connubium or intermarriage with the neighbouring states, by whom they were regarded as a set of vagabonds, rather than as sprung from Mars. See ii. 140.

195. dantur] This may either convey a general sentiment, or stand for dabantur. See sup. 19.

197. patriam mentem.] He does not say animum, 'courage,' but mentem, i. e. 'consilium,' craft to plot a scheme and carry it out. See on these words, vi: 241.

199. Conso.] The festival of this deity, who was the Equestrian Neptune, was kept July 21, or xii. Kal. Sept., according to the 'Tabula Maffeana.' Varro, L. L. vi. § 20 : 'Consualia dicta a Conso quod tum feriae publicae ei deo, et in circo ad aram ejus ab sacerdotibus ludi illi quibus virgines Sabinae raptae.' Virgil, Aen. viii. 635, makes the rape to have happened at the Circenses, by a poetical anachronism, because, as Heyne thinks, they succeeded the old games of the Consualia. There is some uncertainty as to the reading and meaning of this distich. Gierig rightly understands tibi of the poet himself, and dicet of the festival hereafter to be described in the Fasti of July. Thus the address of Mars to Romulus ceases at Conso. Merkel gives canes ; Gierig dum sua sacra canet. Others have ipso festa die.

Sua sacra is not for ejus sacra, but propria, 'peculiar to the day,' i. e. sua refers not to Consus, but to dies.

201. Cures,] The Sabines, sup. 151. The brevity of the narrative is such that no mention is made of the cause of their anger, viz. the rape of the Sabine women. Doubtless it was related on the Consualia of July. — Tum primum. It is probable that this alludes to the wars between Pompey and Caesar, who stood in this relation to each other. The poets are fond of the antithesis.

204. Tracta erant] '(Cum) conveniunt,' &c. See sup. 34 ; i. 267.

206. mea nurus] Hersilia, the wife of Romulus.

208. lente piae.] Our affection must now take an active part on one side or the other, for parents or for husbands.

Et, quasi sentirent, blando clamore nepotes

 Fertilis occultas invenit herba vias. 240
 Nunc fecundus ager ; pecoris nunc hora creandi ;
 Nunc avis in ramo tecta laremque parat.

224. coactus] Compelled by the mere force of circumstances, the confusion of the scene, the example of others, &c. Some have absurdly fancied that the mothers pinched the children to make them cry out.

229. diem, quae prima,] ‘ Quo primum, i. e. olim id gestum fuerit.’ Merkel. — Oebaliae matres. The Roman wives descended from these Sabine mothers. See on i. 260.— munus, ‘ duty,’ ‘ obligation.’ Keightley understands ‘ reward.’

231. Aut quia] If inde (ver. 229) means ob eam causam, this distich is little better than a repetition of the last. Hence Gierig explains it ab illo tempore. But we may perhaps understand the former of the peaceable use of martial arms, the latter of the risk incurred from them by the women.—aut followed by vel is not common. See on Propertius iv.

(iii.) 21. 26. Gierig, with some copies, gives an quia.

235. Quid quod] ‘ Moreover, March is the beginning of spring, and the season of returning fecundity, and as such (ver. 243) ought to be held in honour by the Roman matrons.’ See on iv. 117. Hitherto the poet has treated of the Matronalia as in some way connected with Mars. He seems to have some doubts whether the mere fact of their being celebrated in March will justify the conclusion; and in this and the following suggestion he takes a somewhat different view; while in ver. 251 he returns again to Mars in his relation to Juno. Yet even in the present passage he uses militiam (ver. 244), as if loath to lose sight of Mars altogether, though at the expense of logical consistency. Compare Heroid. xi. 48: ‘ et rudis ad partus et nova miles eram.’

Tempora jure colunt Latiae fecunda parentes,

Quarum militiam votaue partus habet.

Adde quod excubias ubi rex Romanus agebat,

Qui nunc Esquilias nomina collis habet,

Illic a nuribus Junoni templa Latinis

Hac sunt, si memini, publica facta die.

Quid moror, et variis onero tua pectora causis ?

Eminet ante oculos, quod petis, ecce tuos.

Haec dea : de tenero cingite flore caput.

Dicite, Tu lucem nobis, Lucina, dedisti ;

Dicite, Tu voto parturientis ades.

Si qua tamen gravida est, resoluta crine precetur,

Ut solvat partus molliter illa suos.

Arma ferant Salii, Mamuriumque canant ?

245. excubias] It was an old but erroneous idea that Esquiliae and excubiae were etymologically connected ; that on this hill Romulus established an outpost against the suspected designs of Titus Tatius. Varro, L. L. v. § 4: 'secundae regionis Esquiliae. Alii has scripsere ab excubiis Regis dictas: alii ab eo quod excultae a rege Tullio essent: alii ab aesculetis.' Merkel (p. cxxvii.) thinks that the mound is here meant which was extended from the Colline to the Esquiline gate by Servius Tullius, or, according to others, by Tarquinius Superbus. It is marked in the maps as the 'agger of Servius.' He adds, that the temple of Juno Lucina probably occupied the site of the basilica of Sta. Maria Maggiore. The argument of the passage seems to be this: Esquiliae is called from excubiae; on the Esquiline was a temple of Juno; that temple was dedicated by the Roman matrons on the 1st of March; therefore the Matronalia are celebrated on that day.

251. Mater] Juno, who presided over marriage. As the mother of Mars was the patroness of wives, so they in turn honoured her, and indirectly her son. This, as remarked on 235, seems a sort of compromise between the two opinions that the festival was held in honour of this or that deity.

253. flores ;] Hor. Od. iii. 8. 1:—
'Martis coelebs quid agam Kalendis,
Quid velint flores et acerra turis
Plena, miraris.'

There can be no doubt that he here regards Juno Lucina as the principal object of veneration at the Matronalia.

255. lucem] The light of day a birth. See ii. 449.

257. resoluta crine] This was done to typify εὐτοκία, as solva implies in the next verse.

Mars, Mamurius, or Mamers, seems to show that the origin of the college of Salii, who had the keeping of the ancilia, was from Etruria; while Gradivus (i. e. gravis or grandis divus, Varron., p. 91), to whom the Salii were more directly consecrated (Livy i. 20), appears to be an Umbrian title. Virgil, Aen. viii. 285, seqq., makes them sing the praises of Hercules alone.

261. nemori operata] 'Quae versaris circa nemus, sc. habes officium operam ponis, in nemore.'—ad tua facta. By the advice of Egeria Numa was commonly said to have instituted the Salii.

264. lacus] Now Nemi, anciently Nemorensis, Propert. iv. (iii.) 22. 25, a picturesque lake, formerly a volcanic crater. Dr. Arnold (Hist. Rome, i. p. 513) says that this, like some other lakes in the neighbourhood of Rome, lies nestled high up in the bosom of the mountains, as the tarns of Cumberland and Westmoreland, with no visible outlets or feeders.—vallis is the genitive after lacus.

265. Hippolytus] Called in the local mythology Virbius. See on vi. 757. Virg. Aen. vii. 765.

267. Licia] See ii. 575. Votive tablets were attached by threads to the hedges inclosing the sacred precincts. On the custom of returning thanks to Diana of Aricia for the recovery of health see Propert. iii. 24. 9 (ii. 23. 39), who speaks of the torch-procession mentioned in the next distich. Similar practices are still kept up in the tapers and 'ex voto' offerings brought to celebrated shrines in many parts of Europe.

271.] 'The priest named Rex Nemorensis was always a runaway slave, who had slain his predecessor in office, and who always carried a sword for his own protection. Compare A. A. i. 160. Strabo v. 3. 12. Suet. Cal. 35.' Keightley. He held his office, in fact, till another chose to dispute it, and succeeded in taking it by force.

274. exiguis haustibus,] Probably because the water was very cold. Defluit does not necessarily mean 'from the lake,' though it may have had an outlet it has since lost.

275. dea grata Camenis.] Egeria was in fact one of the Camenae (see i. 462. Juven. iii. 16); but as these had become identified with the Greek Muses, it was no longer possible to regard her as more than connected with them.

278. placuit] sc. ei, Numae.

279. ne firmior, &c.] 'That the stronger might not always prevail, justly or unjustly.' Numa's policy, like that of Solon at Athens, was founded on the principle that human laws alone are of little avail unless combined with reverence for religion, and fear of divine vengeance.—pure, without omission or addition. Gierig takes it for pie, as in Tibull. i. 3. 25.

287. Non alias] Georg. i. 487: 'non alias caelo ceciderunt plura sereno Fulgura.'

290. piabile fulmen] This is another instance (see sup. 260) in which the Sabine Numa is represented as introducing what seem to be Etrurian customs. The art of drawing down lightning, perhaps by conductors, was said to have been practised by the Tuscans, and with it we must connect the supposed power of averting the anger of the gods portended thereby.

292. numen uterque] See Aen.

vii. 48: 'Fauno Picus pater, isque parentem Te, Saturne, refert.' Varro, L. L. vii. § 36: 'Fauni dei Latinorum, ita ut Faunus et Fauna sit, hos versibus, quos vocant Saturnios, in silvestribus locis traditum est solitos fari futura, a quo fando Faunos dictos.' He is 'fatidicus senex,' inf. v. 626. Lucret. iv. 583:—

'Faunos esse loquuntur,
 Quorum noctivago strepitu ludoque
 jocanti
 Affirmant vulgo taciturna silentia rumpi.'

He was also called Faunus Fatuus, by a double title, like Aius Locutius, Anna Perenna, &c.; whence fatuus, 'a chatterbox,' came to mean 'a fool.' The connexion with Picus seems to point to some ancient confusion of the attributes of Faunus with augury and the songs of birds.

294. edidit] sc. Egeria. The story is perhaps borrowed from the capture of Proteus in the Odyssey. The supreme god is too awful to be approached at once by a mortal. The intervention of inferior deities is necessary to extort the required secret. Yet even they are reluctant to employ the potent spells which will bring him from the sky, and only do so because they cannot help themselves.

306. addit in vincla] So Amor. i. 7. 1: 'adde manus in vincla meas.'—arta. This is the reading of the best copies. The word seems connected with φαρκτός, φάργγυμι, and if so artus is the older form.

315. qui dominemur] The subjunctive is used like nec quae fas sit above; and generally this is the case when qui has the sense of qualis.—in sua tecta is the reading of the best MSS. Gierig has tela, which gives a better sense. Faunus says tecta, perhaps in reference to his own haunts.

321. ab arte.] See i. 215; inf. 326, ab ore, where Gierig has disci for dici.

323. carmina] 'incantations.'

 Sed tibi, protulerit cum totum crastinus orbem 345
 Cynthus, imperii pignora certa dabo.

327. unde] Jupiter Elicius was so called, not because he was drawn down from heaven, but because his thunderbolts were brought to the earth by the Etruscan augurs, or (according to Livy, i. 20) because through his favour secrets were elicited from the minds of the gods.

331. Corda micant] See sup. 36. We cannot help comparing this remarkable legend with the interview of Moses with the Divine Presence on Mount Horeb.

333. certa] On which reliance could be placed; all others having failed.

337. remota] Any thing 'with-drawn' from observation is hidden and obscure. The context determines the sense, which is very different from 'remota erroris nebula,' Juven. x. 3.

341. Sumes,] Inferior MSS. give summos. Keightley remarks on the ingenuity of Numa in avoiding a human sacrifice. See on vi. 238.

343. facito procures,] ὅπως ἀποτρέψεις. The sense is, 'see that you use these means, and so you shall avert,' &c.—et his, may mean, 'even by these vicarious offerings.'

344. non abigende] The interview was a forced rather than a voluntary one on the part of Jupiter, who seems even to have been obliged to accept Numa's substitutes for the expiatory offerings required.

346. imperii pignora] Certain visible and tangible objects by which the safety of the Roman empire shall be guaranteed, so long as they are preserved inviolate. Cf. inf. 379 and 422. It may be asked, what has the fall of the ancile from the sky to do with the procuratio fulminis just described? Gierig says, 'Dii, quando

e conspectu hominum avolabant, signa quaedam dabant divinitatis suae.' But the idea perhaps is, that the unusual portents of lightning (sup. 285) were brought to a close by the fall of an aerolite. See inf. on 369.

356. a veniente] Most MSS. give adveniente.

357. rorata.] Rorare is strictly a neuter verb (inf. 403), and takes an accusative of the object only in composition, as 'terras irrorat Eous,' Georg. i. 288 (though Lucretius is said to use rorare in a transitive sense). Yet, like many intransitive verbs of the first conjugation, it has a passive participle in use. Such are regnatus, 'ruled over;'; clamatus, 'called for' (iv. 453); erratus, 'wandered over' (inf. 655); triumphatus (inf. 732); ululatus, 'howled after' (iv. 186); cessatus (iv. 617); lacrymatus (i. 339); and similarly bacchatus, 'revelled over.' In these cases the verb primarily expresses an action which is absolute in itself.

When that action has immediate reference to another, as 'clamare aliquem,' the verb has an ordinary active use, and consequently a passive participle. Thus we might expect either 'tellus rorata pruina,' or 'rorata pruina,' 'hoar-frost spread like dew.' Accordingly the MSS. vary between rorata (Merkel) and rorataque (Gierig and Keightley). There are other verbs of the same form which stand as it were midway between transitives and intransitives, being used indifferently as either, like vario, radio, crepo, sono, propereo, festino.—pruina is πρωϊνή, 'the early moisture.'

359. Prodit] The picture here drawn is a fine one. The venerable and religious king, firm in faith, surrounded by his trusty but scarcely trusting subjects; the bright beams of the morning sun reflected on the buildings around; the appeal to heaven; the anxiety of expectation on the countenances of all, are worthy of an artist's pencil.

369. Ter tonuit sine nube] The event here described is the fall of a meteoric mass, which is usually accompanied by a thunder-clap (the result of explosion) even when the sky is clear of clouds. This fact affords an explanation of the phenomenon so often mentioned by the poets, e.g. Hor. Od. i. 34. 7: 'per purum tonantes Egit equos volucrumque currum.' Compare Martial, ix. 25. 3: 'haec sunt Jovis ora sereni; Sic tonat ille deus, cum sine nube tonat.' See Humboldt, Cosmos, vol. i. p. 108. Nearly every circumstance recorded of the fall of the ancile,—making some slight allowance for poetical embellishment,—coincides with what would actually have been observed. The shield (so called) must have been of metal, as a worker in bronze was employed to cast facsimiles of it; and acrolites are generally of nearly pure iron.

372. Submisere] 'Raised,' elevator. So Virg. Ecl. x. 74. Usually, submissi oculi are 'down-cast eyes;' and so some explain this passage. But the preposition does not refer to the result attained, but to the state or condition out of which the action arises; as when the earth is said 'submittere flores,' 'to send up flowers,' i.e. from below.

373. scutum] An oblong wooden shield. Under the belief that it was of this material he adds, versatum leniter and tollit humo. Aerolites are generally driven rather deep into the ground by the velocity of their descent.

377. ancile] The word would seem to come from ἀγκύλη, 'crooked;' but it may be an old Italian term of accidental resemblance. The following passages are given by Gierig, showing the traditional shape, viz. rounded at each end, and curved inwardly at the sides. Varro, L. L. vii. § 43: 'ancilia dicta ab ambe-cisu, quod ea arma ab utraque parte, ut Thracum, incisa.' Festus, sub v. Mamurius: 'sic est appellatum quia ex utroque latere erat recisum, ut summum infimumque ejus latus pateret.' Plutarch, Numa, § 13: κύκλος οὐκ ἐστίν, οὐδ' ἀποδίδωσιν, ὡς πέλιτη, τὴν περιφέρειαν, ἀλλ' ἐκτομὴν ἔχει γραμμῆς ἐλικοειδοῦς, ἧς αἱ κεραταὶ καμπὰς ἔχουσαι καὶ συνεπιστρέφουσαι τῇ πυκνότητι πρὸς ἀλλήλους, ἀγκύλου τὸ σχῆμα ποιούσι. The ancilia are said to be represented on coins of an oval shape. In modern escutcheons the old shape is still preserved, even to the twisted horn-like projections on the upper part.

379. imperii sortem] Supra 346.

- Plura jubet fieri simili caelata figura,
 Error ut ante oculos insidiantis eat.
- Mamurius, morum fabraene exactior artis

 Differ ; habent parvae commoda magna morae.
- Arma movent pugnam, pugna est aliena maritis. 395
 Conditā cum fuerint, aptius omen erit.

381. caelata] This word was used of any device wrought in metal, whether by casting, hammering, or engraving. If we regard the etymology, we must spell it with oe, from κοῖλος, κοιλάλω. But the MSS. generally exhibit ae, as also in coelum, proelium, and some other words.

382. insidiantis] Numa had many fac-similes cast from the same mould, that if an attempt should be made to carry off the real one, on which the destiny of the empire depended, the thief might be deceived.

383. Mamurius,] He is mentioned by Propertius. v. 2. 61, as the 'formae caelator ahenae' of Vertumnus. The name, as observed on 260 sup., is that of the Etruscan Mars. Hence it is easy to account for the mention of it in the Salian Hymns. The statement of Varro, L. L. vi. § 45: 'Itaque Salii quod cantant, Mamuri Veturi, significant veterem memoriam,' is worth no more than four-fifths of that grammarian's etymologies. Probably he was an Etruscan artist, for the skill in working metals was a characteristic of that country. Propertius however says he was an Oscan.—exactior applies more strictly to artis than to morum. The sense is, 'sanctior moribus an peritior artis.' The task was committed to this man by Numa as peculiarly fitted by his piety to reproduce a divine work. Similar stories are recorded of the middle-age painters. Clausit implies, perhaps, as Gierig suggests, that other artists were employed in the work to which Mamurius only put the finishing stroke.

387. Jam dederat] As the songs were already appointed for the Sali to sing, Mamurius was enabled to select at once this reward.—Arma seems to have a double sense, viz. the custody of the ancilia, and certain accoutrements to be worn while they danced and sang.

395. pugna] Not 'domestic brawls,' but 'military service,' which causes temporary separation. Sup. ii. 750.—Conditū. The expression 'condere ancilia' is to be understood of the temporary removal and replacing of the sacred shields in the temple of Vesta. Suct. Otho, § 8.

397. apicati] The Flamen Dialis wore a peaked or pointed cap, whence Virgil, Aen. viii. 664, speaks of 'lanigeros apices.' This form seems to have been a favourite one in the East, probably because it imparted additional height and dignity to the stature. It is seen on many of the male figures in the Assyrian sculptures; and the episcopal mitre of the western Church may perhaps be traced to the same principle.

402. a vento.] One was called νότιος, the other βόρειος by the Greeks. Cic. de Nat. D. ii. 43. 111.

405. sive est, &c.] By whichever name the same constellation is called. See on ii. 153. The statement is inaccurate, as it rises at this time, not sets. See inf. v. 733.

407. Vindemitor.] A star in the constellation Virgo, which rose also in September, a harbinger of the vintage; and the poet means that it will not now escape your sight if you look for it. The Greeks called it προτρυνγητής.

409. Ampelon] There is a beautiful statue of Ampelos in the British Museum, in which he is represented as partly transformed into a vine, and is seen peering from the leaves and clusters into the face of his patron-god Bacchus.

415.] The great variety shown in the Fasti in expressing the simple ideas 'to-morrow evening,' 'three days hence,' &c., proves at once the versatility of the language and the genius of the poet. Though a hundred times repeated, the figure employed is ever new.

Phoëbus, et alatis aethera carpit equis ;

 Numina ; cognatum, Vesta, tuere caput.
 Quos sancta fovet ille manu, bene vivitis ignes.
 Vivite inextincti flammaque duxque precor.

417. Quisquis ades,] Keightley thinks quisquis is here feminine, because none but the Vestals had access to the sacred fire. He adds, that this use is actually found in Plautus. It is proved in Varronianus, p. 319, that qui and quis were originally of distinct declension, though many of the cases have been interchanged. It is certain that quis, like $\tau\iota\varsigma$, was anciently both masculine and feminine; and Varro quotes passages wherein they so occur, L. l. vi. § 60, and vii. § 8. Nevertheless, as the use of quisquis for quae-cunque would have been an archaism in the Augustan age, it is probable that it must here be taken in a general sense.

418. Gratare] 'Express your thankfulness.' The common reading is cratera, though found only in two or three inferior MSS. Besides, it is incorrect as to the fact. For though Gierig quotes in defence of it Virg. Ecl. v. 68, a distinction must be made between the worship of heroes and that of gods.

419. maluit mereri,] This seems naturally to imply, 'quam vi sumere.' But Merkel (p. clxxvi.) says, 'maluit id munus mereri, quia designatus est cum primum a Divo Julio adoptaretur anno u. c. 710.'

He takes maluit for voluit, as in Aen. viii. 322. The title of Pontifex Maximus was conferred on Augustus in 741. See Suet. Oct. § 31: 'Pontificatum Maximum, quem nunquam vivo Lepido auferre sustinuerat, mortuo demum suscepit.' See inf. iv. 949. The common reading is quem maluit, but against all the good MSS.

422. pignora juncta] The Palladium, the sacred fire, and the equally sacred person of the Emperor as Pontifex, were entrusted to the guardianship of Vesta; and on their safety that of Rome was thought to depend. See sup. 346.

423. dignissima ferenti,] 'Most honoured prize to the bearer,' i. e. to Aeneas, who conveyed the sacred things safe from Troy. One or two of the interpolated copies give de veteris Trojae—favilla.—Qua gravis, 'loaded with which.' The praeda here spoken of means Vesta herself, Aen. ii. 296.

425. cognata Numina;] The relationship was not very direct; but the flattery of the Augustan poets did not stop at trifles. Aeneas was from Venus, the daughter of Jove, the son of Saturn, the brother of Vesta, who was one of the elder divinities. Compare iv. 950.

Martii. Gierig has Martis. The sense is, 'There is no meeting of the Comitia or the Senate on this day, because,' &c. See on i. 50.—lucos duos. The space between the two horns or peaks of the Capitol (the Arx and the Tarpeian rock), both of which were originally crowned with wood, bore the name of 'the valley between the groves.' Here stood the temple of 'the little Jupiter,' and here Romulus inclosed with a wall a retired spot for his thieves and renegades, which he called the Asylum. See on ii. 140. Merkel observes, p. cxxviii., 'sapienter Ovidius cavit, ne apertis verbis templi dedicationem Non. Mart. ad Romulum referret. Nam a Tatio consecratam Varro de L. L. v. § 74. tradit.'

434. non invidiosa] Like ἐπιφθονον, Aesch. Suppl. 198, this word nearly corresponds to our expression 'not particular.' No one bore a grudge against his neighbour for being better than himself; or judged him harshly for being worse.

441. Ignibus novis,] The first use made of his thunderbolts was in shattering those peaks.

443. capra] The symbols of Vedjovis are all those of an infant god; a Jupiter without the terrors of supreme majesty. That the title was really Etruscan, and rather guessed at than understood by the Romans themselves, seems tolerably certain. Dr. Donaldson says (Varroonianus, p. 145), 'Another gloomy form of the supreme god was Ve-djus or Ve-jovis, who seems to have represented Apollo in his character of the causer of sudden death. The prefix ve is a disqualifying negative,—the name signifies "the bad Jupiter." He was represented as a young man armed with arrows; his feast was on the nones of March, when an atoning sacrifice was offered up to him; and he was considered, like Summanus, as another form of Pluto.' A similar form of the boy-god was 'Jupiter Anxurus,' of the Volsci, Aen. vii. 799.

446. vesca] Virgil uses the word twice, Georg. iii. 175: 'vescas salicum frondes,' and ib. iv. 131: 'vescum papaver,' and he seems to have regarded it as a synonym of exilis, viectus.

451. Medusae] Hencé Pegasus is called 'Medusaeus equus,' inf. v. 8.

455. nova frena] He had been mounted by Bellerophon when he opened with his hoof the fountain Hippocrene.

459. Coronam Gnosida:] 'The Cretan crown,' Ariadne. — Theseo crimine, 'ob Thesei culpam,' 'per Thesei facinus.' Here, as inf. 516, the person and the constellation are regarded as one.

462. legenda] Propert. v. (iv.) 4.

42: 'cum patuit lecto stamine torta via,' where it has been shown that the primary sense of legere is, 'to gather as you go;' thence, 'to follow windings,' by keeping to a clue, a river, a shore, &c., so that 'legere labyrinthum' would be equally good Latin with 'legere oram,' 'litus,' 'aequor' (iv. 289), 'vestigia,' Aen. ix. 393. Varro rightly remarks, L. L. vi. § 66: 'legere dictum quod leguntur ab oculis literae.'

465. depexis crinibus Indos] 'The straight-haired Indians.' This is said to distinguish them from the tribes of east Africa, who had woolly hair. For the ancients had strangely confused notions of the geography of the East Indies, which they supposed to be one continuous tract with Africa. See Hom. Od. i. 24, who perhaps meant the same thing by his 'eastern and western Ethiopians.' Some connect 'Liber depexis crinibus,' because Bacchus was always represented with gracefully flowing locks. The expedition of Bacchus to India is an instance of that inverted order so common in ancient myths, where the point a person first started from is spoken of as that to which he went. The worship of Bacchus was really brought from India into Greece. Q. Curtius alone supplies convincing proofs of this, independently of other considerations.

Inter captivas facie praestante puellas

468. filia regis] i. e. 'a se devicti.' She is called ironically 'candida pellex,' inf. 493.—Grata nimis, sc. uxori praelata.

474. Ille abiit :] From the frequency of the last syllable being made long before a vowel, in this form of the perfect, but not in such words as meminit, cecidit, &c., we are led to conclude that some compensation was allowed for the loss of the v, as if it were written abiit.

476. relata] 'Repetita,' 'iterata.'

480. potui, &c.] 'I might have ended my griefs once for all,' i. e. 'I might better have been left to my fate on the island of Naxos. On the somewhat irregular use of the perfect infinitive see i. 354.

482. in lacrimas] ἐπι λῶβη, 'to my cost.'

486. quotiens] i. e. 'quod toties loquor,' sc. now for the second time.

490. falli digna] 'Simplex,' 'credula.'

Praecipue cupiam celari Thesea, ne te Consortem culpae gaudeat esse suae.

At, puto, praeposita est fuscae mihi candida pellex.

Eveniat nostris hostibus ille color!

Quid facis? amplexus inquinat illa tuos.

Bacche, fidem praesta, nec praefer amoribus ullam

Conjugis; assuevi semper amare virum.

Ceperunt matrem formosi cornua tauri;

Me tua: at hic laudi est, ille pudendus amor. 500

491. celari Thesea,] ‘Thesea’ is the subject of celari. ‘Ego celor hoc’ is ‘ego habeo hoc a me celatum’ (mihi negatum). The construction of the active verb with a double accusative, e.g. ‘hoc me celavit,’ affords a ready explanation of this idiom. Tibull. i. 8. 1: ‘non ego celari possim, quid nuntus amantis,’ &c. Similarly the Romans said ‘ego poscor hoc.’ Inf. iv. 670. Keightley compares Ter. Hec. iv. 3. 23: ‘nosue hoc celatos tamdiu?’

493. fuscae mihi] This is of course ironical. Much as we of Teutonic descent admire dark women, or ‘brunettes,’ the Italian notion of female beauty was nearly comprised in two features,—‘flavi crines,’ and ‘candor oris,’ i. e. flaxen hair, and a fair skin. What we call paleness or whiteness, they regarded rather as the absence of a defect, namely, brownness. What they called ‘pallor’ (as is shown on Propert. v. 7. 82) we denounce as ‘a bilious complexion.’ See inf. v. 150. Martial seeks his comparisons with a fair face from a swan, a lamb, a lily, ivory, snow, &c., v. 37, and Virgil from the ‘alba ligustra,’ or white flower of the privet. Ecl. ii. 18. He apologises for a dark complexion as a defect, Ecl. x. 39: ‘Quid tum, si fuscus Amyntas? Et nigrae violae sunt, et vaccinia nigra.’ Again, where we should charge persons with being ‘rouged,’ the Romans would have said, and did say, that they were ‘white-washed.’ So Propert. iv. (iii.) 24. 8: ‘cum tibi quaesitus candor in ore foret.’ Martial (ii. 41. 11) alludes to the use of creta and cerussa (white lead) as cosmetics used by Roman ladies. The opposition between fusca and candida, meaning plain and pretty, is frequent in the poets. Propert. iii. 17. 41:—

‘Vidistis pleno teneram candore puellam;
Vidistis fuseo; ducit uterque color,’

i. e. ‘you admire even what others disapprove.’ Heroid. xv. 35:—

‘Candida si non sum, placuit Cephæia Perseo Andromede, patriae fusca colore suae.’

496. inquinat] This is said, though absurdly, in a literal sense, as if the black colour of the skin could come off by contact.

497. fidem praesta,] Opposed to fidem fallere, this always signifies ‘to keep one’s word.’—assuevi means, that she had learnt to show affection and constancy by her union with Theseus. The common reading, assuetæ, appears to be found only in inferior MSS.

499. Ceperunt] Sup. 10.—matrem, sc. meam, Pasiphaë.—cornua. See inf. 789, and on what follows, ortus in igne, &c. Propert. iv. (iii.) 17. 21.

Ne noceat, quod amo : neque enim tibi, Bacche, nocebat, Quod flammis nobis fassus es ipse tuas.
 Nec, quod nos uris, mirum facis ; ortus in igne
 Diceris, et patria raptus ab igne manu.
 Illa ego sum, cui tu solitus promittere caelum. 505
 Hei mihi, pro caelo qualia dona fero !
 Dixerat : audibat jamdudum verba querentis
 Liber, ut a tergo forte secutus erat.
 Occupat amplexu, lacrimasque per oscula siccatur :
 Et, Pariter caeli summa petamus, ait. 510

 Jam tibi mutatae Libera nomen erit ;

509. Occupat] See on i. 575. Quintus Curtius has 'occupatum amplexu,' ix. 7. 22.

512. Libera] Keightley is undoubtedly right in saying that Libera, the genuine Italian correlative of Liber, has no real connexion with the Greek legend of Ariadne. Rather we must identify her with Proserpine and Ceres, and suppose that she was worshipped under that name by the ancient Latin women, as Liber was by the males. But there is a tendency in mythology to assimilate and confound legends, especially when the sources are ultimately the same. Thus Liber and Libera were in the first instance elemental deities, sun and moon, whom Virgil calls 'Liber et alma Ceres,' Georg. i. 7, because the notion of bread and wine, as the chief gifts of heaven, was inseparable in the minds of southern and eastern nations from the mild influences of the celestial bodies. See Cic. de Nat. D. ii. 24. Ceres, then, or Libera, is so far the female Bacchus, that she was worshipped in conjunction with him as a similar benefactor to man. The former was the Etruscan name; on the meaning of the latter see inf. 785.

513. coronae.] The circlet of Indian gems, received from Venus as a marriage present, was changed into as many stars. But some, as Propertius, iv. (iii.) 17. 7, represented Ariadne herself as the constellation.

519. Equiria] See ii. 859.—curvis in latus, winding round three sides of the Campus Martius. If it chanced to be flooded at the southern extremity, where was the Circus Flaminius, in which the races were held (Merkel, p. clx.), they were transferred to the side of the Caelian hill. Varro, L. L. vi. § 13, mentions the Equiria, but says nothing of changing the site. Festus is more explicit: 'Martialis campus in Caelio monte dicitur, quod in eo Equiria solebant fieri, si quando aquae Tiberis Campum Martium occupassent.' See on vi. 205.

523. Annae Perennae.] The legend which Ovid attaches to this ancient Italian goddess may be adduced as a proof how completely the later Romans themselves were sometimes deceived as to the origin of their festivals. Anna is the feminine of annus, properly 'a ring;' whence 'annulus' (Varro, L. L. vi. § 8, quoted on i. 163); and perenna is but a repetition of the same word, 'anna per annam,' or 'the moon in a circle.' See sup. on 292. The revolving year, it is well known even from the verse of Virgil: 'atque in se sua per vestigia volvitur annus,' was symbolized by a circle, which has neither beginning nor end; just as a serpent with its tail in its mouth was a type of eternity. Even 'anus,' 'an old woman,' is really the same word, viz. a woman bent or bowed by age: 'anus curva, Propert. iii. 9. 20. See Varronianus, p. 163. The fact that the festival was held on the Ides is an argument that Anna Perenna really meant 'the round or full moon.'

524. Haud procul, &c.] Merkel defines the place, 'Via Flaminia ad lapidem primum.' Martial, iv. 64. 17, mentions it as 'Annae pomiferum nemus Perennae,' which Keightley says 'must have lain not far from the present Porta Pia, between the road and the Tiber.' On advena Tibri see ii. 68.

532. ad numerum] They count the number of cyathi (ladles full of mixed wine) in order to reckon the years accordingly. On the similar custom of drinking by the number of letters in a name, see Becker, Gallus, p. 131.—ebibere annos is not 'to outdrink,' i. e. surpass, but 'ebibere tot cyathos quot sunt anni Nestoris.'

537. duras] 'Clownish,' 'awkward.' Keightley; who thinks posito is for deposito, i. e. after drinking. But we may equally well understand ‘posito in medio.’ It is the most natural action for revellers to dance round the bowl.

540. fortunatos] This was probably a slang term of the day.

541. Occurri] This reading is only found in two interpolated copies. The others have occurrit, which perhaps need not be rejected, as pompa is easily supplied from the next verse. The words digna relatu have been thought to indicate that a longer narrative has been lost.

545. Arserat] There is a play on this word and igne. The epitaph following, which is sufficiently artistic, is repeated from Heroid. vii. 195.

547. Compositus (erat) cinis, (cum) protinus, &c.] See sup. 33. ‘Condere’ and ‘componere ossa’ are technical terms, the former referring to placing the ashes in the urn, the latter to depositing the urn in the sepulchre, for which ponere was sometimes used. Compare v. 426 with 480; and see Becker, Gallus, p. 519.

551. sine vindice] In the absence of Dido and Aeneas, Iarbas had been the rival of the latter (Virg. Aen. iv. 196: ‘zelotypus Iarbas,’ Juven. v. 45) for the hand of Dido.

553. Thalamis] He boasted that he possessed the house, though without the occupant: there is a play on the word in the sense of nuptiis.

561. unguenta] On this Roman practice, here transferred to Phenicians, see Becker, Gallus, p. 519.

570. Battus] He is commonly represented as king of Cyrene in Africa.

573. Et tamen] This distich would be more appropriately placed after 578. The sense evidently is, 'servasset nihilominus, quanquam deposcente Pygmalione, nisi timuisset opes ejus.' Keightley here repeats his opinion that tamen is 'merely emphatic.' Gierig also explains utique, certe. See on i. 495; iv. 19.

577. Frater] Pygmalion.

582. Parvus ager:] Two of the best MSS. have purus ager, i. e. 'clear,' 'open,' καθαρός. The district was called by the natives 'Camera,' a word evidently connected with 'Camerina,' inf. iv. 477. It was in the extreme point of southern Italy.

585. librantur] Good MSS. give vibrantur. The ancient navigators used to haul down the sails when near land and take to the oars. Virg. Aen. iii. 207: 'vela cadunt, remis insurgimus.' Compare Hom. Od. xvi. 353. Il. i. 432. Aesch. Suppl. 703.—subducere is στέλλειν, 'to furl.'

594. vix quoque] Some copies give is, his, or hic quoque. But it was almost a proverbial token of despair in a storm, when the pilot left the helm and ran to supplicate the effigies of the tutelary gods in the prow. See Aesch. Sept. c. Theb. 196. Even to this day a similar pusillanimity is shown by the sailors of the Mediterranean Sea. Sir Charles Fellows says that the Greeks, 'should the gale increase to a storm, will quit the helm and leave the vessel adrift, to repeat their prayers and cries of despair.' It does not appear on what grounds Merkel (p. clxxvii.) calls this 'locus perdifficilis necdum persanatus.' The sense is, 'at votis poscit opem, quantum vix quoque, prae nimio timore.'

598. aliquam humum.] 'Some ground,' i. e. even though in the grave. For it was thought the greatest of misfortunes to be unburied, if one was lost at sea.

600. expositis] 'having landed,' σεσωσμένοις ἐς χερσόνησον. The word is regularly used in this sense.

602. populos duos.] His own Trojans and the indigenous Latins.

603. Litore dotali] The shores of Latium, i. e. Lavinium, which he had received as a dowry with Lavinia.

612. admonitu] sc. memoria tui. Mortis tuae is found in several MSS.

 Plebs vetus, et nullis etiam nunc tuta tribunis,

647. Numicius] A river near Lavinium, Aen. vii. 150. The epithet is a common one of rivers, like Horace's 'tauriformis Anfidus,' derived, it is said, from the distant roaring of mountain streams, but usually applied to the river-god.

654. Amne perenne] See on 523. The form of the ablative in e, from adjectives in is, is said to be peculiar to Ovid. The usual rule does not apply to proper names, such as Juvenalis, Martialis, and for this reason, that they can have no neuter in e with which the ablative could be confounded. In vi. 158 we have 'de porca bimestre,' and Heroid. xvi. 277, 'a caeleste sagitta.'

655. erratis] See on 357. On hearing the above declaration, the party sent to seek Anna proceed at once to celebrate her apotheosis. In seque diemque celebrant there is a brevity of expression for 'sibi indulgent diem celebrantes,' or 'frequentes coeunt ut celebrent.' Keightley is clearly wrong in suggesting that se is for seipsam, i.e. eam. Such a use would violate the laws of Latinity.

657. Luna] This is shown to be the true view on ver. 523. Io, daughter of Inachus, was also a personification of the moon. The idea that Anna was a daughter of Atlas, and fed the infant Jove, like Amalthea, arises from some confusion in the old mythology, which is not easily unravelled. But we must not forget that Semitic and Pelagic legends are like two streams which have their confluence in Italy, each bringing an admixture of diverse elements. The cultus of Anna was evidently Phœnician in its origin.

664. erat.] A few copies have abit, i.e. abiit; and this is the common reading, retained by Keightley. We should, however, rather have expected in verticem. The secession of the commons to Mons Sacer, A.U.C. 260, is here alluded to: an event which led to the creation of the 'Tribunes of the people.'

667. Bovillis] The epithet 'suburbanae' seems to have been commonly applied to this place, which was about ten miles from Rome. See on Propert. v. (iv.) l. 33. Infra, v. 58.—mundae answers to our word 'tidy,' and implies a mean between luxuria and sordes, as 'mundus victus,' Hor. Epist. i. 4. 11.

669. mitra] This was peculiarly the cap or head-dress of old women. See iv. 135 and 517: 'simularat anum, mitraque capillos presserat.'—Fingebat, sup. ii. 418.

673. Perennae,] The name was derived from the 'perennis cibi copia.'—sibi defectis. The Latinity is unusual: deficio is regarded as a transitive verb, as it was just before used in ver. 665, and perhaps Georg. i. 149, and consequently it has a passive participle like destitutis. See the note on conventus, ii. 667. The progressive steps in this idiom are as follow:—deficit cibus; deficit me cibus; deficior cibo; defectus sum a cibo. Tibullus has 'solem defectum lumine,' ii. 5. 75.

words are those of Anna to Mars: 'My efforts have succeeded; she is at last disposed to consent.'

695. Inde joci, &c.] 'The reason is rather to be sought in the old mode of worshipping deities of increase and production in Greece and Italy, as well as in the East. A curious resemblance has been traced between this goddess and Anna Poorna Devi, a Hindoo goddess of nutrition and abundance.' Keightley. See on i. 62.

697. Praeteriturus eram] Not that he had forgotten the day on which Julius Caesar fell, but that it was a theme which, however treated, would hardly meet with the approval of all parties. A reigning emperor seldom likes to be reminded that his predecessor perished by the hands of the people. This difficulty is hinted at in the words of Vesta: 'ne dubita meminisse,' which imply encouragement and exhortation.—meus sacerdos, sc. Pontifex maximus. See ver. 573. Caesar was elected to this dignity B.C. 63.

700. me] The emphasis is on this word: 'it was I, not Caesar, whom they in fact assaulted.'

702. Caesaris umbra] This clumsy and mendacious pretext, to avoid the invidiousness of deifying a murdered man, is perhaps borrowed from Aen. x. 636. Compare Eur. Hel. 33. II. v. 449.

703. vidit,] Two or three copies give servat, which is the common reading.—magno foro, i.e. Romano. See Sueton. Jul. Caes. § 85: 'Plebs—solidam columnam prope viginti pedum lapidis Numidici in foro statuit, scripsitque, Parenti Patriae.' Id. § 88: 'Curiam in qua occisus est obstrui placuit, Idusque Martias parricidium nominari, ac ne unquam eo die senatus ageretur.' Besides the obelisk above mentioned, a temple was dedicated to the memory of the Dictator in 712.

707. merita.] This is said rather in compliment to Augustus than from any real belief that divine vengeance overtook the conspirators. At Philippi Brutus and Cassius were defeated by Octavian, B. C. 42, and with them fell the liberal cause. See Sueton. Jul. Caes. § 89: 'Percussorum autem fere neque triennio quisquam amplius supervixit, neque sua morte defunctus est. Damnati omnes, alius alio casu periit, pars naufragio, pars proelio; nonnulli semet eodem illo pugione, quo Caesarem violaverant, interemerunt.'

709. elementa] 'Principles.' Dr. Donaldson (Varronianus, p. 140) connects the word with the root ol in adolescens, indoles, &c., quasi olementum, and considers its primary meaning to be 'training-food.'—ulcisci. See Suet. Oct. § 10.

712. a prima parte] sc. tantum; for the constellation sets at this time.

715. nec referam, &c.] He purposely omits, as Keightley observes, the Greek legends connected with the birth of Dionysus. He means, however, generally to say that this is not the place for long stories which have nothing to do with the point in question (725); not that he wishes to distinguish the Italian from the Greek cultus. Perhaps he had in view the Homeric hymns to Dionysus and others.—eras: i. e. 'fuisses, O Bacche.' If he had not been born amidst thunder and lightning, and preserved till the full time of birth in Jupiter's thigh, he would not have been corniger or thyrsiger, nor would his celebrity have been equally great. The explanation of this curious legend, as suggested on Propert. iv. (iii.) 17. 21, is to be found in the fact that the vine thrives best in volcanic soil.

717. Nec, &c.] The construction is, 'nec (referam) matris opus (i. e. partum) expletum, perfectum, patris corpore (i. e. femore).' Q. Curtius (viii. 10. 12) says that Nysa 'sita est sub radicibus montis, quem Meron incolae appellant. Inde Graeci mentiendi traxere licentiam, Jovis femine Liberum Patrem esse celatum.' Eur. Bacch. 286: καὶ καταγέλας νιν ὡς ἐνεῖράφῃ Διὸς μηρῶ.

719. Sithonas] The Thracians. It has already been remarked, that Bacchus is essentially an Indian god. The fact that he was worshipped alike by Greeks and Romans, though under a different name, seems to show that his cultus was introduced from the East by the Pelasgi. Dr. Donaldson has traced the course of immigration pursued by that nation through Scythia and Thrace (Varro. p. 44, seqq.); and the legend here recorded of the Scythian or Slavonian conquests of Bacchus confirms the accuracy of his conclusions. See on iii. 465.

Tu quoque Thebanæ mala præda tacebere matris,

721. Tu quoque] Pentheus, torn to pieces by his mother Agave.—Lycurgus was a king of Thrace, who, in attempting to cut down the vines, wounded his own knee. Hence Propert. iv. (iii.) 17. 23: ‘vesanumque nova nequicquam in vite Lycurgum.’

723. subitos pisces] Propert. ibid. ver. 25:—

‘Curvaque Tyrrhenos delphinum corpora nautas
 In vada pampinea desiluisse rate.’

Compare Met. iii. 630, &c., to which the poet seems to allude in ‘non est carminis hujus opus.’ The above are purely Greek legends. See the Homeric Hymn to Dionysus.

725. Vilis anus] Varro, L. L. vi. § 14: ‘Liberalia dicta, quod per totum oppidum eo die sedent sacerdotes Liberi, anus edera coronatae, cum libis et foculo pro empitore sacrificantes.’ These old women sat with a portable altar before them, and seem to have sold sweet cakes, a portion of which they burned for the benefit of the purchaser. The Liberalia were in fact a kind of modified Bacchanalia. Merkel well observes, that the Greek worship of Bacchus had been prohibited in Italy, and that only a kind of vicarious ceremony was in consequence performed: ‘Rerum omnium apud Græcos sollemnium non nisi umbra quaedam usurpata est; pro Bacchis furentibus anus innocuæ, pro orgiis secretis discubitus publicus, pro vino liba mellita.’ (Praef. p. ccxxxix.) See Livy xxxix. 8—18.

727. aræ] i. e. of the gods in general. Bacchus is here said to have introduced the custom libandi, of offering by way of thanksgiving the first portion taken from any article of consumption.—herba, &c. The altars were grass-grown and neglected.

730. seposuisse] To have set apart and consecrated the first-fruits of his victories.

734. Libaque, &c.] i. e. ‘liba vocantur quia pars libatur (ii. 653); libare autem quasi a Libero.’ See inf. 785.

735. succis dulcibus] The use of honey in offerings to the gods is very ancient. The Greeks had their μελίκρητον (Hom. Od. xi. 27. Soph. Oed. Col. 481) and their μελιτοῦττα; and it is easy to perceive that it would naturally be joined with milk, oil, wine, and flour, as one of the bountiful gifts of mother earth to primitive man. The Romans also drank wine mixed with honey. Georg. iv. 102. Hor. Sat. ii. 2. 15: 'nisi Hymettia mella Falerno Ne biberis diluta.' They offered to Ceres wine mixed with honey and milk. Georg. i. 34. We should remember that before the knowledge of the sugar-cane, honey was the only material which could be employed for sweetening either food or drink. This is, indeed, so obvious, that we may be allowed to wonder at the clumsy stories introduced, of which the following is an example, to account for the usage as originating from some special event.

742.] At the sound of the cymbals, struck in honour of the advent of Bacchus, the bees assembled, and the god then pointed out how they might be made to breed in any convenient place at will. The practice, it is needless to add, is still kept up. See Georg. iv. 64.

748. ceras] i. e. what he mistook for a honey-comb; for he seems to have disturbed a nest of wasps or hornets.

750. Applicat] This is properly used of bringing a ship to land, as sup. i. 543. Propert. i. 20. 20: 'Mysorum scopulis applicuisse ratem.' Heroid. xvi. 126: 'Applicor in terras, Oebali Nympha, tuas.' Silenus is always represented as a debauched old man riding on an ass. He seems to have been a sort of 'awful example,' and to have taken an essential part in Bacchic processions, both as a warning against drunkenness, and as a legitimate object to jeer at. He was the 'Clown' or 'Merry Andrew' of the affair.

751. super] He stood erect on the ass's back, and supported himself by leaning on the stump of a bough. Gierig seems wrong: 'constitit nixus plenius quam, innixus est.'

754. ora summa] His eyes and forehead. There is not the slightest objection to this reading, except that the majority of copies give ora prima. Merkel admits sima, the conjecture of Heinsius. But it appears far from a certain emendation.

761. Melle pater fruitur,] This might seem to mean that Bacchus enjoyed the spoils which Silenus had clumsily failed to obtain. But the mention of 'crabrones,' in ver. 753, is against this; and we may easily explain it generally, in reference to 744.

763. praesit,] 'Presides at the Liberalia.' See sup. 726. Merkel and Keightley read presset, i. e. liba, 'makes the honey-cakes,' from four or five MSS., one of which is the best. Gierig edits praestet. See sup. 725.

769. noverca,] Juno. Some MSS. give opposuere novis in the next verse.

771. toga libera] The 'toga virilis' was assumed usually at the age of sixteen, and usually also (fere) on the Liberalia, no doubt, in allusion to the freedom from puerile restraints which were imposed during the period of the 'bulla' and 'praetexta.' To this Propertius alludes, iv. (iii.) 15. 3:—

'Ut mihi praetextae pudor est
 velatus amictu,
 Et data libertas noscere amoris
 iter.'

The epithet candide perhaps refers to the new and clean toga. The fondness for finding omens in names will sufficiently account for the coincidence of the two events. Compare the double sense of Terminus, ii. 50, and see on ii. 639.

Seu, quia tu pater es, patres sua pignora natos 775
 Commendant curae numinibusque tuis ;

 Et caperet fasces a curvo consul aratro,
 Nec crimen duras esset habere manus,
 Rusticus ad ludos populus veniebat in urbem :
 Sed dis, non studiis, ille dabatur honos :
 Luce sua ludos uvae commentor habebat, 785
 Quos cum taedifera nunc habet ille dea :
 Ergo, ut tironem celebrare frequentia posset,
 Visa dies dandae non aliena togae ?

775. pater] This was a common appellation of Liber or Bacchus. Propert. iv. 17. 2: 'da mihi pacato vela secunda, pater.' Q. Curtius viii. 10. 17: 'Et Rex—per decem dies Libero Patri operatum habuit exercitum.' Plut. Q. R. § civ.: Διὰ τί τὸν Διόνυσον Λίβερον μὲν πατέρα μὲν καλοῦσι; πότερον ὡς ἐλευθερίας πατέρα τοῖς πλοῦσι γενόμενον;—ἢ ὅτι τὴν λαιβὴν παρέσχεν; (Sup. 512.)

779. An quia, &c.] The argument is this: 'or was it that of old, when the Roman populus were generally engaged in agriculture, and only occasionally came to the city for the games, the day of celebrating the vintage was selected for taking the toga, as being the most crowded festival of the year?' The taking of the manly dress seems not to have always been a public ceremony. Propert. v. (iv.) i. 132: 'matris et ante deos libera sumpta toga.'

784. dis, non studiis,] 'To religion, not to party-interests, as now.' This is perhaps the meaning of studia; for the games in the circus and the performances in the theatre were seldom without the attendant evil of faction and rival party feelings. Others understand 'the amusement of the people.'

785. uvae commentor] Here Liber is distinctly regarded as identical with Bacchus and the god of wine; and this is frequently the case in the Roman poets, e.g. Propert. i. 3. 14. Hor. Od. i. 18. 7, 'munera Liberi,' and Od. iv. 12. 14, 'ducere Liberum' for 'bibere vinum.' It is possible, indeed, that this was a later usage; still Keightley's assertion must at least be taken with caution: 'There seems to be no reason whatever for regarding the Italian Liber Pater as a god of wine.' He was worshipped in common with Ceres (dea taedifera) at the Cerealia (Cic. in Verr. 2. 5. 14); and Virgil unites 'Liber et alma Ceres,' Georg. i. 7. See sup. on 512. Merkel, who discusses his ancient attributes without coming to any very satisfactory conclusion, p. cccxxxviii., seems to regard his worship as connected with phallic mysteries, which however is only another proof of his ultimate identity with Bacchus. The name Liber seems connected with λαιβή, to which perhaps Varro alludes L. L. vi. § 2: 'ab loebeso Liberum, ab Lasibus Lares.' See however Varroianus, p. 122; Plutarch, quoted on ver. 775.

787. celebrare] A word peculiarly used of crowds collected together for a purpose, as 'Circus erit pompa celebr,' iv. 391, and in this respect coinciding with frequenture and frequens.—tironem. This name was given to young men when they had assumed the toga, and were as yet unacquainted with manly life. (Mar- tial xi. 78. 11.) They were then said to enter their 'tirocinium.'

789. cornua] The reason of this singular attribute is explained by the intimate connexion of agriculture, of which the ox was the symbol, with the products of the earth. See on Propert. iv. 17. 19. Supra, 499. Hor. Od. ii. 19, 30 : 'Te vidit insons Cerberus aureo cornu decorum.'

791. Itur] On this day a solemn procession took place to the various places where the Argei were kept. On these see inf. lib. v. 621. Varro, L. L. vii. § 44 : 'Argei ab Argis : Argei fiunt e scirpeis, simulacra hominum xxiv. ; ea quotannis de ponte sublicio a sacerdotibus publice deici solent in Tiberim.' Ibid. v. § 45 : 'Argeos dictos putant a principibus, qui cum Hercule Argivo venere Romam et in Saturnia (i. e. Capitolio) subsederunt.' Plutarch (Q. R. § 32) says that the 'Argives' were the ancient Greek settlers whom the aborigines endeavoured to destroy, and that Hercules stopped this ξενοκτονία by suggesting to them men of straw by way of substitutes. Livy i. 21 : 'Multa alia sacrificia, locaque sacris faciendis, quae Argeos pontifices vocant, dedicavit (Numa).' The number of the Argei is uncertain ; some accounts making them twenty-four, others thirty. See Arnold, Hist. of Rome, i. p. 68, note.

798. temptat] Many copies have poscit. The meaning is not very clear : 'He attempts (in vain) to procure for his cause that assistance which the fates, more powerful than the gods, could alone make available.' The legend here given is, as Keightley remarks, undoubtedly of Hindoo origin. It is said to be nowhere else recorded ; but it seems to be, in fact, but another version of the fable of Typho.

805. adamante] Keightley says,

Et jam jam flammis exta daturus erat.
Juppiter alitibus rapere imperat. Attulit illi
Miluus, et meritis venit in astra suis.

Altera tresque super strata celebrantur arena:
Ensibus exertis bellica laeta dea est.

Pallada nunc pueri teneraeque orate puellae: 815
Qui bene placarit Pallada, doctus erit.

'steel;' and this is the common rendering. But this passage confirms the opinion expressed on Propert. v. 11. 4, that adamus really meant 'basalt.' The ancient axe-heads, or 'Celts,' of which many specimens are preserved in museums, are commonly made of this material. They were used by the Romans at sacrifices (Dict. of Antiq. v. dolabra).

806. exta] The larger internal organs, heart, liver, &c. Frequent mention is made in ancient writers (e. g. Aesch. Suppl. 732) of birds of prey snatching the sacrifice from the very altars. Since the invention of firearms birds of all kinds have learnt to keep at a more respectful distance from man. Compare Met. ii. 716: 'ut volucris visis rapidissima miluus extis.'

810. quinque] The error into which Ovid has here fallen seems to have been a general one, for Varro points out the fact that five days were observed instead of one, i. e. the fifth (inclusive) after the Ides. L. L. vi. § 14: 'Quinquatrus; hic dies unus ab nominis errore observatur, proinde ut sint quinque. Dicitur, ut ab Tusculanis post diem sextum Idus similiter vocatur Sexatrus, et post diem septimum septimatrus, sic hic, quod erat post diem quintum Idus, Quinquatrus.' The principle was perhaps originally the same as that of the Feralia (see on ii. 533), viz. that an extraordinary occasion justified an extension of the merely legal holiday. That more than one day was actually kept as the feast of Minerva is quite clear. Thus we read in Juvenal x. 115: 'totis Quinquatribus optat.' Minerva, it is well to remind the student, was an Etruscan goddess; and it was from Etruria principally that Rome obtained a knowledge of the mechanical arts.

813. strata arena:] The gladiators fought both in the amphitheatre and the forum, which were strewn with sand on the occasion, not only to lighten the fall of the combatants, but to conceal the blood which might be shed. Propert. v. (iv.) 8. 76: 'Nec cum lascivum sternet arena forum.' Ovid. Trist. ii. 282: 'Martia cum durum sternet arena forum.' On this day the poet was born. Trist. iv. 10. 13:—

'Hacc est armiferac festis de quinque
Minervae
Quac fieri pugna prima cruenta solcet.'

817. lanam mollire,] 'To card wool,' ξαίνειν. Her. iii. 70: 'Est mihi quae lanas molliat apta manus.'—placata, i. e. 'muncibus,' as appears from 828 inf.

819. stantes] For the ancient looms were erect.—radius is the 'shuttle' by which the woof is conveyed across the warp, and which is driven home by a smart rap of the comb or reed, pecten. All these technical terms are fully explained in the Dict. of Antiq., art. Tela.

820. denset] Many MSS. give densat. If densus were truly an adjective, analogy would require that the form denseo should be a neuter verb. It appears, however, that both densare and densere occur in a transitive sense. Densus is, in fact, the participle of denseo, like censeo, census; or possibly of an obsolete form densere; compare fervere with fervere, &c. The word is properly opposed to rarus, which expresses any thing which has wide intervals of separation. So Virg. Georg. i. 418: 'Juppiter uvidus Austris Denset, erant quae rara modo, et quae densa, relaxat.' Perhaps it was primarily used of the texture of cloth, whatever may be thought of Varro's derivation: 'a dentibus pectinis quibus feritur,'

L. L. v. § 113.

821, 822.] The fullers and dyers are here meant, and in the following verses the shoemakers and the carpenters. On Tychius, a leather-cutter, see Hom. Il. vii. 221, where he is mentioned in the manufacture of a shield as σκυτοτόμων ὄχ' ἄριστος. Epeus (Ἐπειὸς) was the carpenter who made the wooden horse by the aid of Athene. Od. viii. 492; xi. 524.

826. mancus] 'Helpless.' Properly, 'maimed in the hand.' Juv. iii. 47: 'tanquam Mancus, et extinctae corpus non utile dextrae.' The word is here used on account of manibus collatus, 'compared in respect of skill,' or handicraft, χειρωναξία.

829. turba fere censu fraudata,] 'Generally,' or 'too often cheated of your just dues.' Compare the well-known passage of Juvenal, vii. 215, ad fin. Most MSS. give feri sensu fraudante. Minerva was the especial patroness of scholastic lore, whence 'invita Minerva' came to signify 'adverso ingenio,' and 'pingui Minerva,' 'of native wit,' or rather, 'of blunt and unrefined wit.' Juv. x. 116: 'Quisquis adhuc uno partam colit asse Minervam.'

Quique moves caelum tabulamque coloribus uris,

Quique facis docta mollia saxa manu.

831. moves caelum] ‘Ply the graving-tool.’—tabulam uris, ‘paint, or enamel, pictures in encaustic colours.’ Martial, iv. 47:—

‘Encaustus Phaethon tabula tibi pictus in hac est.

Quid tibi vis, dipyrum qui Phaethonta facis?’

Inf. iv. 275:—

‘Mille manus coenat; et picta coloribus ustis

Caelestum matrem concava puppis habet.’

Keightley refers to Pliny, N. H. xxxv. 11, where several methods of practising this art are described.

832. mollia] Some explain this by levia, polita. But it probably means viva, i. e. vivis similia, ‘yielding to the touch,’ as opposed to dura saxa, rigid and inflexible stone. ‘Mollis’ is only an abbreviated form of ‘mobilis.’ See Georg. ii. 389. Juv. i. 83: ‘paulatimque animo caluerunt mollia saxa.’

836. via.] Merkel, with most editions, reads via est. But the repetition of est sounds disagreeably, and in fact it is wanting in most of the MSS. The site of the chapel is disputed: Keightley thinks it may have been near the church of St.

John Lateran, but others place it near the Colosseum. The real origin of the surname Capta seems irretrievably lost; nevertheless, we may venture to reject its supposed connection with caput.

837. delubra] The derivation of this word is uncertain. Some refer it to deliberare, i. e. to release from the ordinary obligations of occupied land. It is defined by Varro (Servius on Aen. ii. 225) to be a place ‘ubi aut plura numina sub uno tecto sunt, ut Capitolium, aut ubi praeter aedem area sit assumpta deum causa, ut in Circo Flaminio Jovi Statori, aut in quo loco dei dicatum sit simulacrum.’ It has reference therefore to the place rather than to the building, aedes. Templum is connected with τέμενος, ground inclosed or solemnly set apart, and generally built upon.

839. Capitale] As the Greeks used ἄκρος, and as we talk of ‘a capital memory,’ &c., so, according to the testimony of Ovid, capitalis was used in the best age of Roman literature.—sollers is from sollus, an Oscan word for totus, and means, according to Festus, ‘in omni re prudens.’

844. littera prisca] The meaning of this is uncertain. Some explain it, 'the old annals,' others, 'an ancient inscription;' to the latter of which Keightley reasonably objects, that if such had really existed there would have been no room for doubt and conjecture. On the other hand, pagina was a more likely word than litera in the former sense. Perhaps he means that, as the word was always found Capta, not Capita, in the oldest records, there was no ground to suppose any abbreviation had taken place. Falerii was captured by Camillus, A.U.C. 361. See sup. i. 641. In such case the deities worshipped by the conquered people were believed to migrate to the conquerors.

846. Ex illo loco?] i.e. 'ex capitali loco.' There was a sacred grove called 'capitalis lucus,' according to Festus and Paul the Deacon, 'ubi siquid violatum est, capite violatoris expiatur.' The difficulty of the passage, which Gierig pronounces corrupt, and Keightley thinks 'almost unintelligible,' consists in the necessity of making Minerva the subject to habet, so that illo loco should mean 'ex ejus delubro.' May we conclude that the latter was identical with the 'lucus Capitalis?'

847. Pallas,—aegida] This affords another notable instance of the poet's propensity to Grecise. From discussing an ancient Italian title, the meaning of which was lost in antiquity, he passes to the Homeric Pallas, as if unconscious of any difference between them.

849. Summa e quinque] The last day of the Quinquatrus. The 'tubilustrium' seems to have been a ceremony something like what we should call 'the blessing of the sacred trumpets.' Varro, L. L. vi. § 14: 'Dies Tubilustrium appellatur, quod eo die in atrio sutorio sacrorum tubae lustrantur.' This ceremony occurred again in May; see v. 725. It was probably of Etruscan invention, as both the tibia and the tuba are said to have come from that people. (Merkel, p. ccxlv.) Keightley says, 'The Atrium Sutorium is utterly unknown.' He quotes a passage from Lydus de Mensibus, p. 85, wherein mention is made of a θεᾶς Νερῖνης, οὕτω τῇ Σαβίνων γλώσση προσαγορευομένης, ἣν ἡξίουσι εἶναι τὴν Ἀθηναίαν ἢ καὶ Ἀφροδίτην. On the words Ner, Nerio, Nero, see Varronianus, p. 112. This then is the 'fortis dea,' the goddess of manly valour, to whom Ovid says a sacrifice was made on the occasion. A few copies give forti deo, which commentators have taken for Mars.

852. vellera pressit] i.e. entered the sign Aries, which was said to have been the ram that carried Helle.—here. On the fourth day of the Quinquatrus, or the 11th of the Kalends of April.

853. novercae.] Ino, step-mother of Helle and Phrixus: see ii. 628; vi. 556. It seems uncertain whether the name Phrixus (Phryxus) is from φρίσσω or from φρύγω, whence it has been already suggested (i. 693) that fruges is derived, rather than from frigor.

855. sorte] Sors, or sortes, in its most obvious and natural sense, refers to the practice of obtaining a response by the accidental arrangement of pieces of marked wood, as in the 'sortes Praenestinae.' But it is often found in the general meaning of 'an oracle,' as ii. 713: 'consultitur Phoebus: sors est ita reddita.' Inf. iv. 197: 'reddita Saturno sors haec erat;' and ib. 261; ex Pont. iii. 1. 31: 'Non semper sacras reddunt oracula sortes.' The word seems to have been used of verbal oracles, because it naturally applies to the decision of any question which cannot be foreseen. See Cic. de Div. ii. 33. 41. 56. Virg. Aen. iv. 346.

857. corruptus cum semine] There is a play on the two meanings 'bribed' and 'spoilt.' See sup. 113. Her. xvi. 25: 'perstet; et ut pelagi, sic pectoris adjuvet aestum.'—sorte peti, i. e. 'postulari ab oraculo.'

863. mater,] She was called Νεφέλη, or 'the cloud.'

865. draconigenam urbem] Thebes. —nimbis. Cf. Aen. x. 634. She enveloped them in mist, and carried them off unseen.

874. gemini pericli,] From Ino on one side and the sea on the other. —caeruleo deo. She was not lost, but married to Neptune.

876. aurea lana] The ram, says the story, was sacrificed by Phrixus, and the glittering fleece suspended in the temple of Mars at Colchis. The legend points to a simple method which is still practised, of collecting particles of gold in running streams.

881. Concordia] See on i. 637 and 709.

882. Salus.] A temple to this goddess stood on the Quirinal, where she was worshipped as Salus Publica. On this day the three shrines were dedicated by Augustus in acknowledgment of the blessings of peace. In what respect Janus was at the 884. Aventino] A temple of Diana on this hill is alluded to in Hor. Carm. Saec. 69: 'Quaeque Aventinum tenet Algidumque.' Propert. v. (iv.) 8. 29: 'Phyllis Aventinae quaedam est vicina Dianae.' Merkel thinks (p. xlv.) that there were two distinct temples to Luna and Diana; and this is the opinion of the accurate Ritter on Tacit. Ann. xv. 41. The temple of Luna is mentioned by Livy, xl. 2.

Contigit, et, Coeptum perforce, dixit, opus.

1. geminorum] Some accounts seem to have represented Venus as attended by twins. 'Concutit taedas geminus Cupido' is quoted from Seneca. Perhaps Horace means nothing more Od. i. 2. 33: 'quam Jocus circumvolat et Cupido.' But Keightley says Eros and Anteros are meant, and thinks that Ovid borrowed the idea from Cic. de Nat. Deor. iii. 23: 'Cupido primus Mercurio et Diana prima natus dicitur: secundus Mercurio et Venere secunda: tertius, qui idem est Anteros, Marte et Venere tertia.' This may be doubted: the number of the Cupids in fact was not accurately defined. In Her. xvi. 201, Venus is called 'volucrum mater Amorum.'—rettulit, 'revocavit.' One or two copies give sustulit, as in iii. 608.

3. certe majora canebas.] 'I thought you were engaged on graver subjects,' i. e. on the Fasti. Compare the opening verses of Book ii. —vetus vulnus, 'your former amative-ness.' Keightley imagines the poet refers to the death of his wife. See Trist. iv. 10, 70. But what follows, 'scis de vulnere,' has an air of mystery in it, which inclines us rather to believe that some particular intrigue is meant,—possibly the cause of his subsequent banishment. Risit would be utterly inappropriate in the former case.

9. Quae decuit,] i. e. 'lusimus ea quae decuit nos ludere.' 'I sang of subjects suited to my age, and no one found fault with them.' So Virg. Ecl. i. 10: 'ludere quae vellem calamo permisit agresti.' Keightley wrongly supplies vita.—area major. The usual metaphor from the Circus.

11. Tempora, &c.] See i. 1, from which these lines are repeated.

15. Mota] By the compliment conveyed in the preceding verse.—

leviter contigit, 'playfully touched me with her wand.' The effect was magical—sensimus, he says—poetical inspiration was instantly imparted.

19. tamen] Though this word is not very easy to explain, Keightley's oft-repeated doctrine that it is 'merely emphatic,' cannot be accepted. See on iii. 573. The idea in the poet's mind was probably to this effect: 'Though you should be indifferent to my poem generally, at all events April must interest you, as the month of Venus.'—Caesar. Not Germanicus, but Augustus.

21. magna imagine] For 'magna imaginum serie,' as Propert. iii. 4. 19 (ii. 13. 19): 'Nec mea tam longa spatietur imagine pompa.' The sense is, 'this month is proved to be yours by a long pedigree,' i. e. by tracing your descent to Venus. On the imagines see i. 591.—adoptiva. Because he was adopted into the gens Julia under the name C. Julius Caesar Octavianus, by the express desire of his great uncle Julius Caesar.

23. pater Iliades,] Romulus. See on iii. 62; v. 565.—scriberet, 'describeret, digereret,' i. 27.

24. rettulit] He as it were 'brought back' Venus and Mars, those gods who were the authors of his race, and commemorated them by naming the two first months after them.

25. primam sortem,] See on ii. 49.—proxima causa, the immediate author of his birth, i. e. the father. This is opposed to the more remote descent from Venus, per gradus multos.

32. Scilicet nesciret, &c.] 'Was it likely that he (Romulus) should not know,' &c. Hom. II. xx. 215—232:—

35. Proximus] Keightley refers this to Assaracus, comparing 123 inf., where Venus is called the daughter-in-law of Assaracus, as the wife of Anchises. Yet we can hardly doubt that in this place 'proximus Capyi' is meant, not only because that is the usual account, but from the continuity of the pedigree from father to son throughout, which would make the mention of Capys otherwise superfluous.

41. Postumus hinc.] From Ascanius or Iulus was born Postumus, who, according to another account, was brother to Iulus, so called, because Lavinia bore him after the death of Aeneas.—subit, 'is subjected to the dominion of Latinus.' In other words, 'Latinus becomes king of Alba.' This is added to prove the local as well as the ancestral descent of the gens Julia.

44. Epitus.] Livy calls him Atys.—titulis, regio honoris.

45. recidiva] Epitus called his son Capys after the Trojan Capys mentioned in ver. 34: 'Recidiva, quae antea jam usurpata ad rem novam adhibentur.' Gierig. Virg. Aen. vii. 322: 'Funestaeque iterum recidiva in Pergama taedae;' also ibid. iv. 344. As recludere means 'to open,' from claudere, 'to shut,' so recidivus is 'rising' from cadere 'to fall;' where, however, re improperly gives the additional sense of 'rising again.'

48. Tuscae aquae.] Supr. ii. 389: 'Albula, quem Tiberin mersus Tiberinus in unda Reddidit.' Compare i. 233.

49. Remulum] The word is only another form of Romulus, as conversely the Greek writers call Remus Ρῶμος. Livy writes 'post Agrippam Romulus Silvius, a patre accepto imperio, regnat.' His death, like that of Tullus Hostilius, is said to have occurred from tampering with lightning. See on iii. 327.

51. Aventinus] By using the word venit he seems intentionally to allude to the derivation of adventinus from advenio, which is given among other guesses by Varro, L. L. v. § 43.—locus. The region or parish

60. continuata] ‘Dicavit Dis, generis sui auctoribus, duos menses serie proxime conjunctos; Martium scilicet et Aprilem.’

62. spumis] ‘Ἀφροδίτη was thought to come from ἀφρός. Varro, L. L. vi. § 33: ‘Quod ad singulorum dierum vocabula pertinet dixi. Mensium nomina fere aperta sunt, si a Martio, ut antiqui constituerunt, numeres. Nam primus a Marte, secundus, ut Fulvius scribit et Junius, a Venere, quod ea sit Aphrodite; cujus nomen ego antiquis literis quod nusquam inveni, magis puto dictum quod ver omnia aperit.’ See inf. 87. Perhaps the word contains the Etruscan root ril, ‘a year,’ on which see Varro-nianus, p. 162. It is a curious fact, that the names of the months we still use are so ancient, that the Romans themselves in the Augustan age could only conjecture their meaning.

64. Graecia major] ‘Magna Graecia’ or the Greek settlements round the lower part of Italy. See supra on i. 462.

67. Hospes] See i. 545.

69. Dux Neritius;] Ulysses, so called from Νηριτω. Od. ix. 21. See Trist. i. 5. 57. This legend, as well perhaps as the name, was probably derived from the Cyclic poems, or the Νόστοι. The visit of Ulysses to the extreme west is said to be recorded in the name Lisbon, shortened from Ulyssippo. The Laestrygonians were thought to have settled on the coast of Campania, at Formiae: whence Horace speaks of ‘Laestrygonia Bacchus in amphora,’ ‘Formian wine.’ Od. iii. 16. 34. The promontory of Circeii, near Naples, was believed by many, from the utterly vague geography of Homer, to have been the far-famed Aeaea, the abode of Circe.

71. Telegoni,] Tusculum was said to have been founded by the son of Ulysses and Circe, Τηλέγονος, ‘the

It was founded by three Argive brothers, Tiburnus, Catilus or Catillus, and Coras. Hor. Od. i. 7. 13: 'Tiburni lucus, et uda Mobilibus pomaria rivis.' Ib. 18. 2: 'circa mite solum Tiburis et moenia Catili;' and ii. 6. 5: 'Tibur, Argeo positum colono.' Virg. Aen. vii. 670.

73. Halesus,] He was either son, or rather perhaps a companion and fellow-adventurer of Agamemnon, whence he is styled 'Agamemnonius Halesus.' Virg. Aen. vii. 724. 'The name of this supposed founder is plainly derived from Faliscus (f and h are commutable); and his Argive origin is owing to the resemblance of the worship of Juno in both places.' Keightley.

77. Antenora,] He was believed to have founded Patavium or Padua, near the mouth of the Po. See Aen. i. 242.—suasorem pacis. Hor. Epist. i. 2. 9: 'Antenor censet belli praecidere causam.' Hom. Il. vii. 348—352.

76. Oeniden,] Diomed, grandson of Oeneus, who married the daughter of Daunus, king of Apulia, and founded therein Argyripa (corrupted from Αργος Ἰππιον*), or Arpi. See Aen. xi. 243—246.—Daunia probably means 'the arable land,' from δα and ῥυσις, 'a plough-share,' as Daulia is 'the woodland,' from δα and ῥλη. The usual custom was, wherever the real meaning of a local name was unknown, to invent some hero or eponym.

78. Aeneas] 'We see not why Antenor and Aeneas should be classed among the Greek colonists.' Keightley. He mistakes the point of the passage. The advent of Aeneas into Italy had been mentioned, supra 37. At ver. 63 the poet had digressed to explain how the Greek element had found its way into the Latin language. He here adds, to avoid confusion in the narrative, that this had happened some time before Aeneas had founded the gens Julia in Latium.

81—84.] These lines must have been added on the revision of the poem, though that revision, with the dedication to Germanicus in place of Augustus, was, as before remarked, only completed in the first book.—gelidi. Elsewhere he says, Trist. 10. 3: 'Sulmo mihi patria est, gelidis uberrimus undis.' It was situate in the Apennines.

83. Ergo age,] One or two copies give ergo ego, which might reasonably be preferred were there more authority for it. We may suppose he wished to say 'ergo ego nunquam redibo? Sed supprime,' &c. The reading in the text must be taken for 'sed age supprime.' A few MSS. have et or jam for sed.

86. Eripuisse] They deny its derivation from ἀφρός and ἄφροδιτη.—invideant regularly has the same construction as eripuisse, viz. both accusative and dative. See Georg. i. 503; Ecl. vii. 58.

90. injecta manu.] This was a formula of taking possession of any unclaimed property. Compare Am. i. 4. 40: 'et dicam, mea sunt, injiciamque manus.' Her. xii. 157: 'clamarem, meus est, injiceremque manus.' Aen. x. 419: 'injecere manum Parcae.'

94. initus] This word is not common. Perhaps the poet copied Lucretius, i. 13. The beauty of the passage (91—114) will readily be admitted.

95. creavit ;] sc. causa fuit ut procrearentur.

101—104.] The natural fierceness even of animals is diminished by the influence of mutual affection, which therefore has a humanizing effect upon all creatures.

108. munda cura sui.] Attention to personal appearance, exhibited in a clean and neat attire as contrasted with the feri habitus, dresses of skins and savage ornaments. See note on iii. 667.

109. Primus amans] 'The lover was the first who employed the eloquence of song in the nightly serenade; and this was the origin of eloquence as a science.' On vigilatum see the note on iii. 357; inf. 167.

112. Pro sua causa] i. e. 'qui postea pro aliena,' &c.

115. quisquam Audeat?] This idiom is not uncommon in the poets, the negative sense (nemo audeat) being conveyed by an interrogation. So Aen. i. 48: 'et quisquam numen Junonis adoret Praeterea, aut supplex aris imponat honorem?' But it is much more usual to find the indicative than the subjunctive mood. Propert. iii. 26. 1 (ii. 34. 1): 'Cur quisquam faciem dominae jam credit amori?' where the Naples MS., perhaps rightly, has credat. Compare iii. 14. 3. Martial. i. 56. 5: 'Quisquam picta colit Spartani frigora saxi?' Ib. v. 20. 14: 'Quisquam vivere cum sciat, moratur?' And x. 49. 5: 'Quisquam plumbea vina vult in auro?'

117. Quid quod] This idiom falls under the same head as the last; but here a proposition is affirmed, and strongly impressed on the reader. 'What must we say of the fact that?' &c. i. e. 'Nay, even'—, or 'moreover'—. Supra iii. 235: 'Quid quod hiems ad-operta gelu nunc denique cedit.' The force of the expression in the present instance is this: 'Though universally venerated, the goddess is particularly honoured by the Romans, whom she has ever befriended; and therefore it is especially probable that a Roman month should be named from her.'

120. cuspidē laesa] By Diomed. See II. v. 335.

122. nolim, &c.] It were to be wished that the judgment of Paris had not exasperated Juno against the Trojans and Aeneas: at all events we hope she may forgive and forget, and not prove adverse to the interests of Rome.

123. nurus] The word is here vaguely used, and does not strictly mean that Venus was the wife of Assaracus' son, but of his grandson, Anchises. See sup. 35.

125.] Besides, independently of the power and universality of Venus, and her peculiar patronage of the Romans, spring is in itself the time of production and regeneration, of beauty and of pleasurable emotions, and therefore aptly named after Venus.

128. gemmas — palmes] See i. 152.

130. Ut solet,] As Venus and Mars were paramours among the gods, so their respective months come together.

131. monet] sc. Venus.—materna, supra 62. The sailing season began in spring, and ended in autumn. During the winter the ships were drawn up on the beach. Hor. Od. i. 4. 2. See inf. v. 601.

134. Et vos,] i. e. 'meretrices.' They were not allowed to wear the vitta and stola, the peculiar dress of matrons, or respectable married women, but were obliged to appear in the toga (Becker, Gallus, p. 435). See Martial, ii. 39. Tibull. i. 6. 67:—

'Sit modo casta doce ; quamvis non vitta ligatos
 Impediat crines, nec stola longa pedes.'

The vittae were of two kinds, respectively worn by virgins and matrons, as is clear from Propertius, v. (iv.) 11. 34: 'vinxit et acceptas altera vitta comas.' Gierig compares ex Pont. iii. 3. 51: 'quarum nec vitta pudicos Attingit crines, nec stola longa pedes,' and Trist. ii. 248—252.

135. redimicula] Gierig says this means the strings of the mitra, or cap, quoting Virg. Aen. ix. 616: 'et habent redimicula mitrae.' In Propert. iii. 21. 15 (ii. 29. 15) we have 'ligamina mitrae.' But there seems no reason why the monile or necklace should not be meant, to which aurea is a more appropriate epithet. Would a statue be dressed up with a cap? It appears that the eastern mitra had pendent flaps or cheek-pieces which were tied under the chin. Virg. Aen. iv. 216: 'Maeonia mentum mitra crinemque madentem Subnixus,' and was worn by men. It is by no means clear that this was identical with the mitra which was the head-dress of old women, supra iii. 669, and which may, as suggested on the passage of Propertius, have been a coloured kerchief folded round the head. The custom of washing statues, as a sort of symbolical purification, was common to the Greeks and Romans. See Callim. Pall. Lav. and Eur. Iph. Taur.

139. sub viridi myrto] It is probable that the myrtle was at first tied round the waist, though afterwards perhaps transferred to the head. ἑσπεφανωμένοι μυρσίνη λούονται, Plut. Num. § 19 (quoted by Gierig).

143. myrto :] This shrub is found of the sea-shore. Virg. Georg. ii. 112 : 'litora myrtetis laetissima.' Ib. iv. 124 : 'amantes litora myrtos.'—opposita, sc. inter se et Satyros.—referre, sc. id factum, repetere.

145. Fortunae Virili] This goddess was generally worshipped as influencing the fortunes of men. Here she is the patroness of women in their relations to the opposite sex. The custom of making a trifling offering to her when the women went to the baths, lest any personal blemishes should offend, is mentioned in the 'Tabula Praenestina,' (or ancient Fasti discovered at Praeneste,) quoted by Keightley : 'Frequenter mulieres supplicat Fortunae Virili, humiliores etiam, in baliniis, quod in iis ea parte cotidie utique viri nudantur, qua feminarum gratia desideratur.'—eo, i. e. 'eo loco qui,' &c. For gelida several MSS. give calida, which Gierig prefers, though he observes that nothing is known of the spot where the lavatio took place.

152. Sumere,] It was part of the ceremony to take a little of this mixture, probably in the bath. The custom, as Keightley states, is now where else mentioned.

155. sub illa] 'sub praesidio ejus,' sc. Fortunae.

157. lapsa est :] 'had fallen from.' The story is thus given by Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 83 : 'It is said that a certain maiden called Elvia was struck by lightning while riding on horseback ; and that the horse was found lying without its trappings, and the rider with her clothes in disorder, her shoes, rings, and head-dress scattered about, and the tongue protruding from the mouth. the soothsayers having declared that the Vestal Virgins were disgraced, and that the matter would shortly be made public, and that some of the knights would be compromised, a foreign slave gave information that three of the Vestals, Aemilia, Licia, and Martia, had been for some time secretly connected with some men, one of whom was the master of the informant. Accordingly, the Vestals were convicted and punished; but as the affair seemed unusually momentous, it was resolved that the priests should consult the Sibylline books. Upon which, it is said, predictions of the event in question were found, with intimations of its danger to the state, and injunctions to bury alive at once two Greeks and two Gauls, by way of appeasing certain strange and foreign gods, and to avert the calamities impending.

160. verso corde] A temple was erected to Venus Verticordia; or, according to other accounts, only a statue. Gierig refers also to Valerius Maximus, viii. 15, and Pliny, N. H. viii. (vii.) 35. The object seems to have been to recal men from profligacy to legitimate marriage.

167. Semiustam facem] See on v. 508.

169. humeros relevare paternos,] 'Atlas, Pleiadum pater, humeris gestat coelum. Ubi igitur filiae oc-Humboldt, Cosmos, vol. iii. p. 47: 'The Pleiades show that some thousand years ago, as now, stars which astronomers call of the seventh magnitude were not visible to the naked eye in persons of ordinary powers of vision. The group of the Pleiades consists of a star of the third magnitude, Alcyone; two of the fourth magnitude, Electra and Atlas; three of the fifth, Merope, Maia, and Taygeta; two between the sixth and seventh, Pleione and Celaeno; one between the seventh and eighth, Asterope; and several very small telescopic stars.—It was only the six first, named stars of the third, fourth, and fifth magnitudes respectively, that could be easily seen.—It was supposed that one of the daughters of Atlas, Merope, the only one who had married a mortal, remained veiled through bashfulness, or even that she had entirely disappeared. She was probably the star of almost the seventh magnitude, which we now call Celaeno; for Hipparchus remarks, in the commentary to Aratus, that in clear moonless nights seven stars could really be perceived.'

177. Electra] Sup. 31. The final a is lengthened as in the Greek Ἠλέκτρα, Κασσάνδρα. So also in Propert. iii. 5. 5: 'Non sic Electra, salvum cum vidit Oresten.' In like manner we have Rheā, inf. 201; Amaltheā, Tibull. ii. 5. 67.

180. Berecynthia] Berecynthus was a mountain in Phrygia. There was, it is well known, a mount Ida both in Crete and Phrygia; and the legends of the great Asiatic goddess Cybele generally confuse these two places, which shows that the cultus of this deity, if not the people, had a common origin in both. Strabo (x. p. 466) says that many persons were disposed to identify the Curetes, Corybantes, Idaei Dactyli, &c. with the Cabeiri; an argument that the worship of Cybele was Pelasgian.

183. semimares] i.e. the priests called Galli, inf. 221. See i. 587.

'Tympana tenta sonant palmis, et cymbala circum
 Concava, raucisonoque minantur cornua cantu,
 Et Phrygio stimulat numero cava tibia mentes.'

The din of these instruments was terrific; 'horrificæ fertur imago,' says Lucretius, 610, and hence terret, inf. 190.

186. exululata] See note on iii. 357.

187. Scena ludique] At the Megalesia the theatres and circus were open, inf. 326. 391; Livy xxix. 14; Juven. xiv. 263; xi. 191: and there was a justitium or suspension of business.—fora. See i. 47.

the Muses. For their father Jupiter was the son of Cybele. Most MSS. give quam scite. Merkel reads da, dea, quem sciter. doctas Cybeleia neptes Vidit, et, &c. Quas sciter appears only to be found in one inferior copy.—Vidit. A few copies have audit. We should rather have expected sensit. There is some difficulty in the word, unless we prefer to follow Merkel, in which case it would stand for resperxit. May we understand vidit curam meam et jussit eas adesse?

195. illi Cessit.] It fell to her lot to speak about April, the month of Venus, because her name is from έρᾶν, 'to love.'

197. sors] See on iii. 855; inf. 261. Hesiod. Theog. 463: πρύθετο γὰρ Γαίης τε καὶ Οὐρανοῦ ἄστερόεντος, Οὐνέκ' αἱ οἱ πέπρωτο ἐῶ ὑπὸ παιδὶ δαμῆναι. The narrative which follows is given by Hesiod; but he says nothing of the noise made to drown the cries of the infant Jupiter. Strabo, lib. x. § 11. p. 468, writes as follows: 'They tell a tale that Saturn was wont to devour his own offspring as soon as born. That Rhea, anxious to conceal the time of her labour, and remove out of the way the child that should be born, and so if possible preserve it alive, sought the aid of the Curetes; who by their attendance upon her with drums and such noisy instruments, by dancing in arms and confused shouts, bewildered Saturn, and so got away from him his offspring unperceived.'

204. movere fidem.] κινεῖν τὰ πεπιστευμένα, 'to question what is generally received.' Fides, as a recent writer has remarked, bears six distinct meanings: (1.) 'belief or credence,' actively, as in 'fidem facere'; (2.) 'credit or credibility,' passively, as supra 58, 'emeruit vocis habere fidem'; (3.) 'fidelity' or 'trustworthiness,' as a man is said to be dubia fide; (4.) 'a proving or making good' any thing; (5.) 'faithfulness, or adherence to truth,' as Tac. 'rerum fide tradentur'; (6.) 'faith pledged, or promises given, to another.' The present passage falls under the second head.

205. saxum.] Hesiod. Theog. 485, τῶ δὲ σπαργανίσασα μέγαν λίθον ἐγγυάλιξεν Οὐρανίδῃ μέγ' ἄνακτι, θεῶν προτέρω βασιλῆι. Τὸν τόθ' ἔλῶν χεῖρεσσιν ἐήν, ἐγκάπθετο νηδύν.

209. sudibus,] This reading is from Lactantius, who quotes the passage ; it is preserved only in three of the inferior copies of Ovid : two read rudibus, the rest manibus. Sudes is 'a pike ;' here a 'bludgeon.' It is used in the singular by Propertius. v. (iv.) l. 28 : 'miscabant usta proelia nuda sude.' The end was usually hardened in the fire. Virgil calls the instrument praeustae, Aen. vii. 525, 'obustae,' xi. 894.

210. Curetes—Corybantes] Strabo, x. p. 469 : says, οἱ δ' Ἑλληνες τοὺς προπόλους αὐτῆς ὁμωνύμως Κορυήτας λέγουσι — τοὺς δ' αὐτοὺς καὶ Κορύβαντας καλοῦσι. But in p. 466 he expressly mentions that some considered them the same, others συγγενεῖς ἀλλήλων, only related to each other, and with some small differences. It does not seem possible to limit the attendance of the former to the infant Jove, that of the latter to Cybele. Lucretius (ii. 630) only mentions the Curetes, 'qui Jovis ollum Vagitum in Creta quondam occultasse feruntur.' In this, as in the Pyrrhic and Salian dances, we are forcibly reminded of the war-dances and war-whoop of modern savages.

212. rauca terga] The tympana of the next verse ; cf. inf. 342. The epithet is more appropriate to the harsh clang of cymbals, which Propertius calls 'cymbala rauca,' iv. (iii.), 17. 36.—tibia dat, &c. The only instrument which has not been changed is the Phrygian pipe.

215. coepi :] The subjunctive praebeat shows that quaerere must be supplied, and the interrogative after júbas omitted ; as Merkel has rightly edited. Compare ii. 57. The typical meaning of the lions was, in the words of Lucretius, ii. 605 : 'quod quamvis efferat proles Officiis debet molliri victa parentum.' In another sense, they represented the country she came from, for lions are found to this day in Asia Minor. Similarly the Indian Bacchus was drawn by tigers.

218. curru] junctis leonibus.

219. turrifera] The ancient cities of Asia Minor, as Sir Charles Fellows shows in his travels, were often fortified with towers and battlemented walls. See Lucret. ii. 607.

226. puer] Here opposed to vir, in the sense in which Martial uses the latter, xi. 78. 12; infra, 242.

227. fidem] 'A pledge,' or promise. See sup. 204 (6.).

229. Sagaritide] Sagaris or Sangarius was a river of Phrygia. The nymph however was not properly a Naiad, or water-nymph, but one of the Hamadryades, whose existence was supposed to terminate with the trees they were attached to. Hence the goddess, to revenge herself on Attis, kills the tree, and with it the nymph.

232. fatum Naïdos] 'Fatum ejus pendebat ab arbore.' Gierig.

233. furit ;] 'Turns mad.' See

Catullus, lxiii. 4, seqq. — credens procumbere. Doubtless from one of the frequent and terrible earthquakes which in early times desolated Asia Minor.

236. Palaestinas] See on ii. 464. Who these Syrian goddesses were is not clearly known. The Furies appear to be meant, if we may judge by the context. Gierig attempts a solution of the difficulty by suggesting that Palaeeste, a city of Epirus, may be meant, in which country the Furies are said to have been worshipped.

244. jactatis comis.] Tossing their hair wildly in imitation of Attis, ver. 238.

 Penates, but afterwards resolved to her ancient abode.—Trojam portaret.

255. saecula quinque] In the year of the city 549, in consequence of repeated portents, the Sibylline books were consulted, and the following injunction found therein:
 'Quandoque hostis alienigena terrae
 Italiae bellum intulisset, cum pelli
 Italia vincique posse, si Mater Idaea a Pessinunte Romam advecta foret.'
 Livy, xxix. 10. Strabo, xii. cap. v:

 σμούς. Accordingly, legates were sent to Attalus, king of Pergamus, who demanded and obtained the sacred image.

257. Euboici] The Sibylline or Cumaean books are so called because Cumae was founded by the Chalcidians of Euboea; whence Martial has 'Euboicae Sibyllae,' ix. 29. 3.
 It seems probable that these far-famed books were in part at least the prophets of the Old Testament.
 It is remarkable that Aelian, Var.
 Hist. xii. 35, mentions among others a Jewish sibyl. They were probably a code or collection of Eastern prophecies, of various sources and authenticity, the least valuable part of which was burnt in the six out of nine volumes offered to and rejected by Tarquin.

260. casta manu.] 'Cum Romam

265. proceres.] M. Valerius Lacvinus, of consular rank, M. Caecilius
 Metellus, an ex-praetor, Sulpicius Galba, and two others of inferior rank.

267. cum murmure] The reader

- Et sic est adytis diva locuta suis :
 Ipsa peti volui. Ne sit mora : mitte volentem.

 Ille soni terrore pavens, Proficiscere, dixit :

will notice the preposition : ' tremuit simul cum murmure,' i. e. ' non modo tremuit sed murmuravit.' The subterranean rumbling of an earthquake is meant, which the superstition of the times attributed to the restlessness of the goddess.

271. Ille] Attalus.—Nostra eris; i. e. ' even though you should go to Rome you will still belong to Trojans, since Rome traces back its origin to Phrygian ancestry.'

274. Phryx pius] Aeneas. See Aen. ix. 80—85. Her. xvi. 105—110.

275. coloribus ustis] See on iii. 831. The colours were laid on mixed with melted wax, upon which the sea-water had no effect. The Idaean mother, according to Arnobius quoted by Gierig, was an aerolite. ' Allatum ex Phrygia nihil quidem aliud scribitur missum rege ab Attalo nisi lapis quidem non magnus, ferri manu hominis sine ulla impressione qui posset, coloris furvi atque atri, angellis prominentibus inaequalis.' The tendency to worship these mysterious visitants from the world without has been noticed on iii. 369. Humboldt (Cosmos, i. p. 126) well observes that ' a meteoric stone affords us the only possible contact with a substance foreign to our planet. Accustomed to know non-telluric bodies solely by measurement, by calculation, and by the inferences of our reason, it is with a kind of astonishment that we touch, weigh, and analyse a substance appertaining to the world without.' The fanatical emperor Elagabalus used to carry a black stone, doubtless of the same kind, about with him in a chariot, and to worship it as divine. Such, perhaps, was the famous Palladium, vi. 421.

277. sui nati,] Neptune.

280. opes.] See iii. 50. Sup. 250. ' Eëtion, Andromaches pater, Theben habebat, a Troade ad Austrum versus Adramyttum sitam. Homer. Il. i. 366; vii. 395; xxii. 480.' Gierig. Keightley gives Et Tenedum, et, &c. Merkel omits et with some good MSS. In this case we must assume that the dominion of the Asiatic Thebes extended to Tenedos. The promontory of Rhoeteum is called capax from its fitness for a statio or naval position. A few copies give rapax.

282. Quaque, &c.] i. e. ' et eo loco relicto, ubi,' &c. For Euboea had to be passed before the ship reached the Cyclades.

289. legit.] See iii. 462.

291. Ostia] The mouth of the Tiber, which is said dividere se in altum, to distribute its pent-up waters into the sea by a double channel, inf. 330. — campus, like aequor and occasionally ἄλσος, means the sea itself. Met. i. 41 : ‘campoque recepta Liberioris aquae pro ripis litora pulsant.’ Aen. x. 214 : ‘campos salis.’

298. Vix subit, &c.] ‘With difficulty makes head against the stream.’ Subire is ‘to get close up to’ any object, and thence ‘to ascend,’ as ‘subit Capitolia,’ Propert. v. (iv.),

4. 27. Q. Curt. ix. 10, ‘hinc adversum flumen subiit classis.’ The ship itself was hospita, ‘peregrina,’ which circumstance, by a poetical figure, is supposed to have increased the difficulty of the navigation.

306. nobilitate] The ablative is used from the comparative sense of impar, i. e. ‘deterior,’ ‘inferior.’ Cf. vi. 804. Keightley prefers to understand generi. Clausus was the founder of the Claudian house, and the ancestor of Appius Claudius Caecus. See Virg. Aen. vii. 706. Livy ii. 16.

310. ad rigidos senes.] In perty conversing with grave old men,

- Conscia mens recti fama mendacia risit ;
 Sed nos in vitium credula turba sumus.
 Haec ubi castarum processit ab agmine matrum,
 Et manibus puram fluminis hausit aquam,
 Ter caput irrorat, ter tollit in aethera palmas ; 315
 Quicumque aspiciunt, mente carere putant.

whose age she supposed would secure her from blame. In these verses there is probably an allusion to the suspicions which about this time (A. U. 752) were entertained against Julia, the daughter of Augustus, whom the poet ingeniously defends.

313. ab agmine matrum.] This does not show, as Keightley thinks, that she was herself a matrona. She was in fact a Vestal, to whose virginity a supernatural attestation was vouchsafed. Propertius (v. (iv.) ll. 51) calls her 'turritae rara ministra deae,' which can hardly have any other meaning than that she was a vestal. It seems sufficient in the present instance to suppose that the vestals walked in procession surrounded or accompanied by the matrons.

324. Re] By an act, not by mere words. Cf. i. 649.—pignora vitae, i. e. 'sanctam fuisse vitam.'

326. scena] The story seems to have been a favourite subject for the stage at the Megalesia. Supra, 187.

327. Mota] See sup. 15.—laudat, 'sequendo dat testimonium pudicitiae ejus.' Gierig.

330. Atria]. This is the reading of the best MSS. which Merkel has restored. Others give Ostia. To this it may reasonably be objected, that so well-known a place as Ostia would not be particularly described. One of the many turnings of the stream (perhaps, a nook or hole worn in the bank by the current) may have been called 'the abode of father Tiber,' though the name be not elsewhere recorded, and the place itself may have vanished by the changes which are always taking place in the course of rivers. Merkel, p. cxlvii., is of this opinion, and adds, 'si Romae essem, quaerere rei vestigia circa Campo Morto vel Pisciarello et cauponam di mezzo camino, inter quae satis fortiter in sinistram partem circumagitur Tiberis.' In Aen. viii.

65, the Tiber says of Rome, 'hic mihi magna domus.' Cf. Met. viii. 562.

334. posito foco] A temporary altar erected for the purpose. See ii. 542.

335. coronarunt.] See Georg. i. 304.

337. Almo] See ii. 601. — ab amne. See on iii. 321. In this instance indeed the preposition cannot be called superfluous, since the ablative could not have stood alone: nomen perdit ab amne is nomen habet ab amne haustum, or, as Gierig paraphrases it, 'perdit propter magnitudinem ejus in quem influit.' The same construction occurs ex Pont. lib. iv. 10. 46: 'Vimque fretum multo perdit ab amne suam.'

339. purpurea veste] The use of purple or scarlet garments in sacred processions is very ancient. See on Aesch. Eum. 982. The washing of the image of Cybele in the Almo was repeated every year. Hence Martial, iii. 47. 2:

'Capena grandi porta qua pluit gutta,
 Phrygiumque Matris Almo qua lavat ferrum.'

Lucan, Phars. i. 600: 'Et lotam parvo revocant Almone Cybeben. Hence the goddess is called 'Almonis domina.'

343. praecedit celeberrima] 'Walks in front attended by a great crowd.' See inf. 391. It does not seem correct to join 'laeto celeberrima vultu,' with Gierig and Keightley.

347. Nasica] Publius Cornelius Scipio, whom the Roman people had adjudged most worthy, though very young, to do the honours to the goddess. See Livy, xxix. 14. Supra, 260.—non perstitit, 'has not remained the same,' i. e. the honour of dedicating it has now passed from Metellus to Augustus, who rebuilt it. It appears from Trist. ii. l. 23, that Augustus greatly encouraged this eastern and effeminate worship:

'Ipse quoque Ausonias Caesar matresque nurusque
 Carmina turrigeræ dicere jussit Opi.'

The reading is rather doubtful: some copies give nunc, tum, tam, or nam for non, and praestitit or extitit. Gierig thinks auctor only refers to the proposer of the measure to the senate.

350. parva stipe.] The custom of collecting money from the bystanders for exhibiting images of the gods, and especially that of Cybele, is well known, and is very ancient. See Aesch. Ag. 1244. The Greek term was ἀγείρειν or μητραγυροτείν. Ovid could hardly be aware of the universality of the practice, for he treats it as a local peculiarity of the worship. Compare Epist. ex Pont. i. 1. 39:

‘Ante deum Matrem cornu tibicen
adunco

Cum canit, exiguae quis stipis aera neget?’

Lucretius, ii. 627: ‘Aere atque argento sternunt iter omne viarum, Largifica stipe ditantes.’

353. vicibus factis] i. e. mutua, as Virg. Georg. i. 301: ‘mutuaque inter se laeti convivia curant.’ The custom of giving and receiving dinners at the Megalesia seems to have been kept up among the higher classes. The verb mutitare is said to have expressed this interchange of hospitality.—indictas, ‘ad quas non vocantur, sed quas ipsi convivae indicunt.’ Gierig. Keightley understands ‘announced, proclaimed, to which the people were invited.’ Certain families may be supposed to have given public notice, that during the Megalesia they would keep open house. It appears from Cicero, de Senect. xiii. § 45, that clubs or sodalities were established in Rome for this express purpose.

357. Institeram.] ‘I had conceived the idea of asking.’—primi. The first in importance; the ‘great games.’

364. Gallus.] The derivation here given is absurd, for no river-water could possibly cause insanity. We must rather suppose that the term Galli had a different meaning in some lost eastern dialect.

367. moretum] A word nearly equivalent to our 'salad,' though our principal ingredient, the lettuce (lactuca), does not seem to have had a place in it. It was a mess of pot-herbs mixed with cheese, oil, and vinegar, and pounded in a mortar with salt. Hence elisae herbae in 371, i. e. with the juice squeezed out and mixed together. Virg. Ecl. ii. 11: 'Allia serpyllumque herbas contundit olentes.' It nearly corresponds to the 'gazpacho' of the modern Spaniards.

373. Pallantias] Aurora. Met. ix. 420: 'Queritur veteres Pallantias annos Conjugis esse sui.'

375. valle Quirini] This is the reading of good copies; but the majority give colle, which is defended by Gierig. The temple of Fortuna Primigenia was dedicated in 558 A.U.C. (Livy xxix. 36. 53.) It stood on the side of the Quirinal facing the Viminal, and therefore in the slope or hollow between the two. Another temple was dedicated to Fortune on the 25th of May, inf. v. 729. Merkel, p. cxxix., shows grounds for believing that both were on the Quirinal; the one known as 'Fortuna Primigenia,' the other as 'Fortuna Publica in citeriore colle Quirinali,' of later but unknown date.

377. Tertia lux] i. e. of the Megalesia.—ludis erat, 'scenae vacabat.' The victory of Julius Caesar over Pompey and Juba, king of Numidia, at Thapsus, B. C. 46, was not formally commemorated at Rome, as Gierig observes; but the poet introduces it by way of preface to the mention of his dignity as one of the 'decemviri litibus judicandis,' who formed a part of the college of the 'vigintiviri,' and were appointed by Augustus to the presidency of the Centumviri (Suet. Oct. § 36). See Dict. of Antiq. in v. 'Vigintisexviri' and 'centumviri.' The latter had the decision of certain private causes, and Ovid seems himself to have been one of them, Trist. iv. 10. 34, and ib. ii. 1. 95: 'res quoque privatas statui sine crimine iudex.'

383. Hanc sedem,] Ovid was an Eques, ii. 128, and therefore entitled to a separate place in the theatre. But as a Decemvir he sat, as Gierig shows, in the orchestra, i. e. the front and foremost rank of all the spectators. The old man who talks to the poet on the same seat had attained the same post of Decemvir, though for different deserts.

385. seducimur] 'We were compelled to withdraw.' The theatres were open above head, except that an awning (velum) was in some cases stretched across to keep off the sunbeams.

386. Pendula Libra] There is the same play on the idea of material scales, which are held or suspended when used in weighing, as in Georg. i. 208: 'Libra die somnique pares ubi fecerit horas.' Similarly 'Cancris signa rubescunt,' vi. 727.

387. tamen,] We may easily supply the obvious sentence: ('And now the Megalesia draw to a close;') yet before the last day, &c.

391. Circus] See sup. 187. Gierig thinks that these Ludi Circenses belonged to the Cerealia, and reads in 393 hi for hinc with Heinsius. But it is certain that the 'Megalesiacae spectacula mappae,' Juv. xi. 191, were part of the solemnity of the present festival. The pompa alluded to was a procession of noble youths, with chariots and minstrels, from the Capitol to the Circus, where certain equestrian performances were gone through for the amusement of the people. See vi. 405. Tac. Ann. xii. 41: 'Et ludicro circensi, quod acquirendis vulgi studiis edebatur, Britannicus in praetexta, Nero triumphalium veste travecti sunt.' Ibid. xv. 53, we read 'circensium ludorum die qui Cereri celebratur,' i. e. pridie idus, according to Ritter, which was the first day. Is not the last day rather alluded to? In the 'Tabula Maffeana' the 'Ludi Matris Magnae' are marked on Ap. 4th, and repeated for the six following days, the last being 'Ludi in circo.' After an interval of one 'dies intercircis' the Cerealia commence likewise with 'Ludi,' which continue for the next seven days, and end, as before, with 'in circo.'—numero deorum. The images of the gods were carried on this occasion. See Amor. iii. 2. 43:—

'Sed jam pompa venit; linguis animisque favete:

Tempus adest plausus: aurea pompa venit.

Prima loco fertur passis Victoria pennis;

Huc ades, et meus hic fac dea vincat amor.

Plaudite Neptuno, nimium qui creditis undis,' &c.

—ventosis, 'swift as the winds.'

398. tenera fronde] The ablative of the material from which any thing is composed. The sense is, 'tender tops of trees ;' though we are not bound to consider the statement as literally true.

405. Aes] Copper or bronze. It is certainly a remarkable fact that this metal was much more common with the ancients than iron. Lucret. v. 1286 :—

'Et prior aeris erat quam ferri cognitus usus,

Quo facilis magis est natura, et copia major.'

The latter indeed was so rare that we often read of turning reaping-hooks into swords, as Georg. i. 508 ; sup. i. 697. In the early period of Rome the as was really a pound weight of copper, and yet was of very small intrinsic value. Dr. Arnold thinks that some large superficial deposits of copper must have been accessible in those times, which have long been entirely exhausted. It may have been used for money before it was extensively applied in the arts ; so that its cheapness was rather in consequence of the small consumption than of a superabundant supply. Of all the metals copper generally lies the deepest. The only iron ore the Romans obtained at home was from Ilva, Elba, 'insula inexhaustis Chalybum generosa metallis,' Aen. x. 174. The 'Chalybes nudi,' Georg. i. 58, were a nation near the south shore of the Euxine sea.—debuit tegi, 'propter abusum ejus in bello.' Gierig.

418. Plura recognosces ;] 'You shall hear it more at length in another place,' i. e. Met. v. 341, which poem seems to have been in hand at the same time with the Fasti. See Merkel, p. cclvi.

421. Grata Cereri :] For the island was famous for producing corn. Gierig refers to Cicero, Verr. iv. 48.

423. caelestum matres] The Nymph Arethusa (a fountain so called at Syracuse) had invited the elder goddesses,—matronas,—to a banquet, and thus it happened that Proserpine was left in the care of none but her young friends.

436. gremium,] 'The lap,' a term applied to the receptacle formed by clasping the arms against the breast, as an infant is held 'in gremio matris,' Juv. iii. 176; sup. ii. 756. Sinus is the loose folds of the tunic or toga, according to the sex alluded to.

438. ungue] This verse is perhaps from Propert. i. 20. 38.

439. hyacinthe,] The Turk's cap, or Martagon lily.—amarante. 'Immortelle,' or 'everlasting,' perhaps amaranthus blitum. It was a red or purple flower, as is clear from Tibull. iii. 4. 33.—rorem, rosemary, 'ros marinus,' so called from the mealy whiteness, like dried sea-foam, under the leaves. As the plant grows on rocks near the sea, this sticky substance would naturally be attributed to the effects of sea air. In the same way our word mildew is said to be corrupted from meal-dew. Mr. Maclean, on Horace (p. 151, smaller ed.), says it is rather for 'rosa marina;' but this seems a guess.—meliloton, 'melilot' (melilotus officinalis), a yellow clustered flower not uncommon in England.

441. sunt et, &c.] i. e. 'sunt et alii quos legunt.'

445. patruus] Pluto, the brother of Jupiter.

448. sinus.] Sup. 436. 'Abscisso sinu' occurs in Propert. v. (iv.) 4. 72, of the tunic torn in madness, as here in grief.

451. aequalis,] Equals in age, ὀμήλικες. So 'chorus aequalis Dryadum,' Georg. iv. 460.—ministrae, the nominative in apposition, 'her attendants.' Some few copies give the vulgate, 'cumulatis flore canistris.'—ad tua dona, 'ad flores, quos tibi donare volumus.' Gierig.

453. clamata] See on iii. 357.

455. modo venerat] She had just returned from the banquet. Supra 423.

459. sua mater] This use of sua appears to depend on a mental confusion between the subject and the object, as if the poet had meant 'ut vitulus desideratur a sua matre.' Otherwise the usage would be scarcely correct. See ii. 678.

466. sues.] 'Sues melius poeta omisisset in hac narratione.' Gierig. There is however a reason for mentioning them. The sow was the natural enemy of Ceres (sup. 414), and in this instance as in others caused trouble and disappointment. On the following narrative Gierig justly remarks : ' Non putandum est, Ovidium justo ordine iter aliquod designasse, aut serie locorum neglecta perturbationem animi, qua Ceres erraverit, indicare ; sed satis habuit, quod et in Metam. opere aliquoties fecit, plura loca memorabilia congerere.'

470. verticibus] This form of the word is preserved in the best MSS. Virg. Aen. iii. 702 : ' immanisque Gela fluvii cognomine dicta.'

474. curvae falcis] Zancle or Dre- panum is meant, the former being the old name for Messana, the latter a town on the west coast.

476. Sacrarum boum.] The oxen of the sun, slaughtered by the companions of Ulysses, Od. xii. 127, seqq.

477. Heloria Tempe,] The valley of the Helorus, near the promontory of Pachynus.

480. prima] trina is a probable conjecture.

487. vidisset] On the omission of si or cum, which is nearly confined to the perfect subjunctive, see i. 315. An seems to stand for sive. It would be awkward to supply the usual ellipse incertum est.

495. pumicis] See ii. 315. Mr. Long remarks on Caesar, B. G. iii.

Alta jacet vasti super ora Typhoëos Aetne,
 Cujus anhelatis ignibus ardet humus.

 Portat, et arsuris arida ligna focis. 510

21, referring to this verse, that structura is a word properly applied to the works of miners in making galleries and supporting roofs.

500. Nisaei canes ;] On the confusion of Scylla, daughter of Nisus, and Scylla the sea-monster, (which, as is suggested on Aesch. Ag. 1204, is merely a poetical legend of a huge cuttle-fish,) see on Propert. v. (iv.) 4. 39. Virgil has fallen into the same error, Ecl. vi. 74, as well as other writers.

504. triste] The Greeks called this stone ἀγέλαστος πέτρα. Apollodorus, i. 5. 1, has nearly the same narrative. 'In the form of a woman she (Ceres) came to Eleusis, and in the first instance she sat down on the rock called after her Ἀγέλαστος, near the well named Callichorus. Afterwards she arrived at the palace of Celeus, king of the Eleusinians.— Now Metanira, wife of Celeus, had a son, whom Ceres took from her and nursed. Wishing to make him immortal, she used to place the infant at nights on the fire and so remove his perishable body ; but in the day time the child (his name was Demophon) so wonderfully grew, that Metanira watched to see what the goddess would do. Accordingly she detected her in the act of placing him on the fire, and shrieked out ; upon which the child was burnt up, and the goddess manifested herself in her real character. But she made for Triptolemus, the elder of the two sons, a chariot of winged dragons, and gave him wheat to scatter over the whole earth from his aerial car.'

507. Quod nunc] There are many readings of this distich. The common text gives quo nunc —, dicitur hoc Celei rura fuisse. Merkel gives hoc Celei ; but almost all MSS. have hic, which is unobjectionable. Eleusis, the seat of the famous Mysteries, means 'the arrival,' in allusion to the present event.

 Tecta suae subeat quantulacumque casae.
 Illa negat : simularat anum, mitraque capillos
 Presserat : instanti talia dicta refert :
 Sospes eas, semperque parens ! Mihi filia rapta est,

 Dixit, et ut lacrimae, neque enim lacrimare deorum est,
 Decidit in tepidos lucida gutta sinus.
 Flent pariter molles animis, virgoque senexque ;
 E quibus haec justi verba fuere senis :

 Jam spes in puero nulla salutis erat.

517. anum,] Se esse is a rather harsh ellipse. Infra v. 504: 'parent promissis, dissimulantque deos.'—mitra. See on iii. 669.

521. neque enim, &c.] On this beautiful passage Keightley quotes the equally beautiful verse of Euripides, Hippol. 1396: ὄρω, κατ' ὄσσων δ' οὐ θέμις βαλεῖν δάκρυ. In the same way the immortals had not blood, but ἵχωρ, Hom. Il. v. 340.

527. qua cogere posses ;] i. e. the argument you use is irresistible, when you make my consent the condition to the fulfilment of your wish, sit filia sospes.

532. papaver] This was gathered for the relief of the sick boy, for the ancients knew the value of laudanum as an anodyne; whence Virgil speaks of growing fields of poppies, 'Cereale papaver,' Georg. i. 212. See inf. 548. The edible seeds of this plant she thoughtlessly (imprudens) tasted after her long fast. It is probable that this has some connexion with the similar act of Proserpine in tasting three pomegranate seeds (inf. 607), and that both bear a certain mystical relation to the fasts kept by the initiated (μύσται):

- Matre salutata,—mater Metanira vocatur—
 Jungere dignata est os puerile suo. 540
 Pallor abit, subitasque vident in corpore vires.
 Tantus caelesti venit ab ore vigor.

 Nataque; tres illi tota fuere domus.
 Mox epulas ponunt, liquefacta coagula lacte, 545
 Pomaque et in ceris aurea mella suis.
 Abstinet alma Ceres, somnique papavera causas
 Dat tibi cum tepido lacte bibenda, puer.
 Noctis erat medium, placidique silentia somni;

 Et seret, et culta praemia tollet humo. 560

 Ioniumque rapax, Icariumque legit;

545. liquefacta coagula] Curds mixed with milk so as to become a thin pulpy substance.

554. purget] The idea that fire alone could fit mortality for a celestial life was generally held by the ancients. For this reason the body of Hercules was to be consumed on Mount Oeta before he could be numbered with the gods.

557. Dum non es,] ‘Quamquam scelerata non es, quia unice amas filium, aequae tamen ei nocuisti, ac si eum odisses.’ Gierig.

559. sed primus arabit,] ‘Quamquam non potest esse immortalis, hoc tamen praemium habebit, ut primus viam colendi monstret agricolis.’ He is ‘unci puer monstrator aratri,’ Georg. i. 19.

561. nubem trahit,] νεφέλην ἐπεσπάσατο, ‘nube circumdata in cursum transit, cui dracones juncti.’ Gierig: who observes that the poet passes over all allusion to the institution of the Eleusinia, and proceeds with the narrative of Ceres’ progress.

566. Ionium] The sea off the coast of Ionia; not that called Ἰόνιος

Perque urbes Asiae longum petit Hellespontum :

after the passage of Io (or rather, her journey as far as the Hadriatic), Prom. Vinct. 859. On legit see iii. 462.

568. Diversum] See on i. 132. Having passed from Athens in a N.E. direction to the Hellespont, she then proceeds in a totally different, if not directly opposite route, to the S.E. and S.W.

577. Parrhasides] The Great

Bear was so called from the Arcadian Callisto, sup. ii. 155, seqq.; also named Helice, iii. 108.

593. Gyge] Gyges is here made one of the giants who fought against Jove. Horace calls him 'centimanus Gyges,' Od. ii. 17. 14; iii. 4. 69; where, as in this passage, there is a confusion between the Titans and the rebel giants.

596.] The sense is, 'However,

- Juppiter hanc lenit, factumque excusat amore;
 Nec gener est nobis ille pudendus, ait:
 Non ego nobilior; posita est mihi regia caelo;
 Possidet alter aquas; alter inane Chaos. 600
- Sed si forte tibi non est mutabile pectus,

 Hoc quoque tentemus, siquidem jejuna remansit:
 Si minus, inferni conjugis uxor erit.
- Tartara jussus adit sumptis Caducifer alis, 605
 Speque redit citius, visaque certa refert.
- Rapta tribus, dixit, solvit jejunia granis,
 Punica quae lento cortice poma tegunt.
 Haud secus indoluit, quam si modo rapta fuisset, Maesta parens, longa vixque resecta mora est. 610
- Atque ita, Nec nobis caelum est habitabile, dixit:
 Taenaria recipi me quoque valle jube.
- Et factura fuit, pactus nisi Juppiter esset,
 Bis tribus ut caelo mensibus illa foret.

 Sumite; nunc pulli velleris usus abest. 620

I am contented to waive the punishment he has deserved, on condition that he restores the bride and makes up for his former ill-conduct by an act of justice.'

602. Stat] Both stare and sedere (Virg. Aen. vii. 368) are used to express fixed determination and resolve.

603. jejuna] 'Erat lex fatorum, ut nemini ab inferis redire liceret, qui ibi aliquid gustasset. Pluto igitur Proserpinam prius quam dimitteret granum punici mali, ροϊῆς κόκκον, edendum dedit. Hym. Hom. 335. 371—412.' Gierig.

612. Taenaria valle] In the depths of Tartarus, to which there was said to be a descent from Taenarum, at the foot of the Peloponnese, Georg. iv. 467.

614. Bis tribus mensibus] A compromise was effected, by which Proserpine was to live half the year in heaven and half below the earth. Apollodorus, i. 5. 3, and the author of the Homeric hymn to Ceres, make the period of her residence in heaven two-thirds of the year. Proserpine was the Moon, whose phases are thus symbolically described.

617. cessatis] See on iii. 357.

620. pulli velleris] In times of public mourning the Cerealia were not celebrated. Livy xxii. 56; xxxiv. 6. Gierig.—vellus here means the toga.

621. Victor Juppiter :] A temple to Jupiter under this title was solemnly vowed by Q. Fabius Maximus before he went against the Samnites, A.U.C. 458. See Livy, x. 29, and Merkel, p. cxxx., who has a long dissertation on the disputed site of the Atrium Libertatis, of little interest to the general reader. He concludes, from several considerations, that it was 'in extrema parte montis Quirinalis, qua Campum Martium spectat.' The date of its dedication is unknown: it is mentioned in the year 542 by Livy, xxv. 7. The Hall of Liberty which Suetonius (Oct. § 29) relates to have been built by Asinius Pollio, Merkel (cxxxiii.) thinks was an addition to the Temple as rebuilt by Augustus on the Aventine. He ingeniously adds, that it is in allusion to this that the poet says coepit habere. The word (atria) is used in the plural in reference to the former, Trist. iii. l. 72.

622. hac die.] The general rules with regard to the gender of dies are as follow: (1.) In the plural it is always masculine; (2.) in the singular it is masculine when a particular and limited period, a day, is meant; (3.) it is feminine when indefinite time is expressed, as 'longa dies igitur quid contulit,' Juv. x. 265. But, as in this place, Ovid often uses the feminine where we should have looked for the masculine. See v. 26 and 734.

627. Scilicet ut fuerit.] 'However this may have been,' i. e. stormy or not. The battle of Mutina was fought in 710 by the consuls Hirtius and Pansa against Antony. They both fell in the contest; and the event commemorates the birth of Ovid, 'Cum cecidit fato consul uterque pari,' Trist. iv. 10. 6.—'Verbis militia sua non est improbabile Ovidium respexisse ad id, quod Suetonius Oct. § 10 tradit, et ducis, et militis, et aquiliferi munere perfunctum esse tunc Octavianum' (Merkel, p. lxii.).—contudit, 'crushed,' is a stronger word than the event of the battle justified; for Antony escaped and lived to give Octavian no little trouble till his final defeat at Actium.

630. sacra litate] Like sacra piare, Propert. i. l. 20, the term is poetically used for sacra facite. The festival was called Fordicidia, which the poet is of course obliged to express by a circumlocution. Varro, L. L. vi. § 15: 'Fordicidia a fordis bubus. Bos forda quae fert in ventre. Quod eo die publice immolantur boves praegnantes in curiis complures, a fordis caedendis Fordicidia dicta.'—fetus, fecunda, words which the Romans, ignorant of etymology, derived from fero, are from feo, connected with φύω. See Varro, p. 348. Festus (in v.) writes, 'Fordicidiis boves fordae, id est gravidæ, immolabantur, dictæ a fetu.' Perhaps the word is corrupted from an old verbal φορτός, 'loaded,' i. e. 'gravidæ.'

635. arce Jovis ;] In the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus.—Curia, the Curia veteres ; see on iii. 139. One cow seems to have been offered at each curia.

637. vitulos] The embryo or fetus was taken from the victim and separately burned by the eldest of the Vestals, that the ashes might be employed for lustration on the great feast of the Palilia. Inf. 733.

644. aqua ;] The Romans knew nothing of the present system of draining fields. The only process with which they were acquainted was that of removing the surface water from puddles, Georg. i. 114.

645. primis in herbis,] i. e. the crop failed or proved abortive even before the time of coming into ear. Herba is commonly used for 'green corn.' Tibull. ii. l. 19 : 'Neu seges eludat messem fallacibus herbis.'

646. avena] Georg. i. 154 : 'Infelix lolium et sterile dominantur avenæ.'

647. acerbos,] 'premature.' The word is properly said of unripe fruits : hence it is transferred to untimely deaths both of men and animals. Juv. xi. 44 : 'Non præmaturi cineres nec funus acerbum Luxuriæ.' Aen. xi. 28 : 'funere mersit acerbo.'

650. Maenaliæ deo.] Pan, who, as in ii. 271, sqq., inf. 762, is confounded with Faunus.

651. animo quieto] i. e. 'animo quiescentis, non auribus, accepta.' Animo is, of course, the dative. All sudden impulses proceeding from

- Prima cadit Fauno, leni cadit altera Somno ;

 Bis sua faginea tempora fronde tegit.

 Et secum ambages caecaque jussa refert.
- Expedit errantem nemori gratissima conjunx, 670

- Hanc quondam Cytherea diem properantius ire Jussit, et admissos praecipitavit equos, unaccountable causes, and hence also secret revelations in the silence of night, were attributed to Pan. See ii. 286.

654. Sternitur] The idea seems to be borrowed from Virgil, Aen. vii. 81—95, where Latinus, wishing to consult the oracle of Faunus, ‘caesarum ovium sub nocte silenti Pellibus incubuit stratis, somnosque petivit.’ It was called ‘incubatio,’ Cic. de Div. i. xliii. The practice seems to have been derived from the idea that animals, or even parts of them, if dead, were a medium between mankind and the god who was the author of their instincts. ‘Ovid transfers some of the points to be observed in order to obtain the oracle on the Albunea, to the oracle on the Aventine. Both may have had much in common, but from the story which he relates of Numa, it seems to be clear that on the Aven-tine certain different ceremonies also were observed.’ (Dict. of Antiq., art. Oraculum.)

655. caput intonsum] ‘Quia tum nondum tonderi solebant Romani.’ Gierig. Supra, ii. 30: ‘intonso savos.’

658. anulus] ‘Nempe incubantes soluti esse debebant omni vinculo cinctus, calceorum, annulorum.’ Gierig.

660. sua verba] Compare ii. 542: ‘adde preces positis et sua verba focis.’

664. dextro] ‘Quia propitius monet quid agendum sit.’ Gierig.

666. animas duas.] The mother and the young one yet unborn. Supra 637.

669. conjunx,] Egeria (iii. 154).—Expedit errantem, sc. Numam; oraculum interpretatur dubitanti, haerenti.

670. posceris exta] On the construction see iii. 491.

675. titulum imperiū] The title of Emperor, which implied supreme and absolute command of all the citizens in their military relation of centuriae, though he affected to use it 'civiliter.' Augustus was not the first who assumed it, for Julius Caesar had adopted it. Gierig dates the above event A. U. C. 724. Merkel, from Dio 52. 41, assigns it to his fifth consulship (725): but Ritter on Tac. Ann. i. 9. shows that it was differently reckoned by other writers.

678. Dorida] Here used for the sea, as in Virg. Ecl. x. 5. She was daughter of Oceanus, and wife of Nereus.

680. Circus] From this verse, compared with 711, it is clear that the Cerealia lasted from April 12th to 19th inclusive, and that not only the Megalesia (sup. 187) and the Floralia (v. 189) but the Cerealia were brought to a conclusion by exhibitions in the Circus. See sup. 391, which Gierig erroneously ascribes to the latter festival, and thence concludes that the Circus was open from the first day to the last.—Carcere. This word is rarely used in the singular when it signifies the enclosed spaces or stalls at the end of the Circus, from which the horses were let out by suddenly and simultaneously removing the barriers. Georg. i. penult., 'ut cum carceribus sese effudere quadrigae.' But in Georg. iii. 104, we have 'ruunt effusi carcere currus.'—partitos is here passive, as is frequently the case with the past participles of deponents.

683. Carseoli] This conjecture of Heinsius is adopted by Merkel from one of the best MSS. The common reading is Carseolis. This place was on the high ground between Rome and the territory of the Peligni, on the via Valeria. It is described as a good soil for corn, not, as Gierig thinks, without reason and 'obiter tantum,' but to prepare the reader to conceive the amount of damage done by the accident described. Keightley objects that Carseoli could not have belonged to Rome when the Cerealia were instituted. It was enough for the Romans to enjoy the fun of the fox-hunt in the Circus, perhaps as an interlude between the heats (Merkel, p. clxi.), and to find an apology for it by a tale from the nearest corn-land. Nor can we wonder that so frivolous an affair is no where else recorded. Ovid was likely to mention it as having happened in his native soil.

- Is mihi multa quidem, sed et haec, narrare solebat,

690. Unde] This refers to multa quidem ; and the subjunctive shows that the old man was consulted with especial view to embodying his information in the books of the Fasti.

694. curvae falcis,] Keightley understands by this a sickle. Gierig more correctly compares Georg. i. 155 : 'aut ruris opaci Falce premes umbras.'

695. stantem tibicine] 'Supported on props.' Juv. iii. 193 : 'nos urbem colimus tenui tibicine fultam.'—villam (for viculam), here used simply for 'a homestead,' in its proper sense, as the residence of the proprietor on his estate. Such were called 'villae rusticae,' as opposed to the suburban residences, which corresponded to our meaning of the term. Most MSS. give telam or pratam.—ova fovenda, &c. This is mentioned on account of 704.

697. fungos] 'Ancipites fungi' are mentioned as forming part of the client's dinner in Juvenal, v. 146, and as contrasted with the boletus of the lordly host, and also in Martial, iii. 60. 5 : 'Sunt tibi boleti : fungos ego sumo suillos.' Whatever species of mushroom is meant, they were evidently held in small estimation.

704. cohortis] cors, cohors, Angl. court, connected with χόρτος (whence also hortus), was properly an inclosed space or yard, in which fowls were cooped up, or even cattle (Varro, L. L. v. § 88).

709. vivere captam] This reading, which affords plain and appropriate sense, is only found in two MSS, and those not of the best. The great majority have dicere certam. One of the oldest gives curtam ; whence Merkel has ventured upon the improbable correction de cruce curtam, and necat in the next verse for vetat.

716. victima major] Georg. ii. 146: 'et maxima taurus victima.' The sun passes from Aries into Taurus.

719.] 'Whether it be Io changed into a cow, or the bull which carried Europa, it is against the will of Juno that it was thus rewarded for the amours of Jove.' See v. 619.

721. Palilia] Keightley seems right in retaining this reading against Merkel, who edits Parilia from one of the best copies. For Ovid evidently connects the name of the feast with that of the goddess Pales. Both ways of writing the word are found in the best writers. Propertius v. (iv.) l. 19: 'Annuaque accenso celebrare Parilia foeno;' w^rere see the note. Varro, L. L. vi. § 15: 'Palilia dicta a Pale, quod ei feriae, ut Cerialia a Cerere.' Others, it appears, considered the word to come from pario. Gierig properly observes, that Ovid would, after his usual custom, have assigned some reason for the latter orthography, had he recognized it.

725. stipulas fabales,] 'Bean-stalks,' probably reduced to ashes. Cf. 734. Whether this straw was preferred for the bonfires (for it gives out much smoke and consumes slowly), or whether the Pythagorean theory about beans suggested their use, is uncertain. The latter is not improbable. Man has in all times had a vague instinct for human expiatory sacrifices; and beans might have been fancifully considered as the nearest inanimate substitute. See inf. v. 436; vi. 170.

726. februa] See ii. 19—30.

727. transilui flummas,] This custom, Keightley remarks, has been kept up to this day in Ireland and Scotland; an argument, perhaps, that it was from the Italian Celts that the Romans derived it.

729. Mota dea est.] See sup. 15. inf. 778.

733. Sanguis equi] On the October horse see on Propert. v. (iv). l. 20: 'qualia nunc curto lustra novantur equo.' The horse was killed in October, and the coagulated blood collected by cutting off the tail was preserved in the temple of Vesta to form, with other ingredients, a suffimen, or fumigation for purifying the people on the Palilia.

736. Unda] It is customary to sprinkle a floor before sweeping it; hence the two acts are often joined. In the Ion of Euripides we find the youthful keeper of the temple using a bough of bay for both purposes, vv. 105. 115. 145, &c. Compare inf. v. 677.

738. longa corona] Festoons of flowers.

739. vivo de sulfure] The Greek θειον or θειειον, so often mentioned in the Epic poets as used for purifying houses, &c. It is called vivum, perhaps, because it is found in a virgin or native state; as vivum saxum means growing or undisturbed rock, i. e. not artificially disposed. Cf.

741. mares oleas] The olive is dioecious, i. e. it bears the male and female flowers on different trees. Hence perhaps the one which alone bore fruit was spared, while the other was freely cut for festive purposes.—taedum. Pieces of resinous pine-wood. See on ii. 558. Pliny appears to consider it as a particular tree, pinus sylvestris, or Scotch fir.—crepet. See on i. 76.

743. sequatur:] 'Attend,' 'accompany.' See i. 187.

744. dapes suas;] On suas, see supra 660. The banquet here meant is clearly the rustic feast of cakes and milk, for no blood was allowed to be shed on that day. Propert. v. (iv.) 4. 76: 'cum pagana madent fercula deliciis.' These cakes were resectae, i. e. sectae, cut into squares or quarters like the Roman quadra, and our gingerbread and cross-buns, both of which have their origin from the quadra, with a symbolical meaning, in the latter case, subsequently attached.

746. Palen] So Merkel has

Consule, dic, pecori pariter pecorisque magistris :

Effugiat stabulis noxa repulsa meis.

Sive sacro pavi, sedive sub arbore sacra,

Pabulaque e bustis inscia carpsit ovis ; 750

Nec Dryadas, nec nos videamus labra Dianae edited, though many good MSS. have Palem. He records an ingenious conjecture (p. ccix.) that Pales, who is sometimes masculine, sometimes a goddess, is the Latin form of Φαλῆς, whom Aristoph. Acharn. 263, calls ἑταῖρον Βακχίου.

749. sacro] The ellipse of loco is not uncommon, as τόπω is often similarly to be supplied in Greek. Many MSS. give sacra. The list of innocent sins which follows curiously illustrates both the superstitious fears and the trifling observances of a primitive pastoral life. There is moreover a touching simplicity throughout the whole petition, which affords a strong contrast to the frightful depravity of civilized Rome as described in the pages of Juvenal and Martial.

754. fiscina frondis] ‘A hamper of leaves.’ In countries where grass is less plentiful than with us, sheep, goats, and cattle are still fed in great measure on the foliage and succulent twigs of trees. See Virg. Georg. i. 266; ii. 435. Ecl. x. 30. The excuse for trespassing in this case is that a sheep was sick, and ordinary food would not suffice for it. Fiscina seems to have been a basket of large size, for Pliny, N. H. xviii. 31 (quoted by Gierig), speaks of filling four fiscinae as a good day’s work.

755. degrandinet,] This reading, found only in three MSS., is admitted by Merkel in place of the vulgate degrandinat, ‘while the hail is falling.’ The sense rather perhaps requires, ‘until the hail is over.’ On dum with the subjunctive, see ii. 263, and compare dedoluisse, iii. 480, desaevio, detunesco, &c.

757. lacus,] The tanks or cisterns artificially constructed for containing water. See on Propert. iii. 5. 12. A natural pond or reservoir may also be meant. In hot countries, where water is scarce, it frequently happens that the foremost animals are huddled together in the pond in their eagerness to drink, so as to render it mere liquid mud for those which come next.

761. labra Dianae] Properly ‘bathing tubs,’ then generally any basins large enough for immersion. The word seems an abbreviation of lavacrum, lav'crum. The story of Actaeon and Diana is here alluded to. See Met. iii. 161. Her. xxi. 177. ‘Prisco seculo mortales impune cernere poterant Deas, etiam nudas. Propert. iii. 11. (iv. 13.) 38: Seriore poena afficiebantur, qui deos invitos viderant.' Gierig.

762. Faunum,] i. e. Pan. See ii. 267. The idea of waking Pan when he was taking his siesta, or noon-day nap in the fields, is borrowed from Theocritus, i. 15.—premit arva, 'cubat in arvis.' Gierig.

769. caseus] Virg. Ecl. i. 35:—

'Quamvis——

Pinguis et ingratae premeretur caseus urbi,

Non unquam gravis aere domum mihi dextra redibat.'

770. sero ;] The whey or butter-milk which drained from the curd after being placed on a sieve of wickerwork or rushes. The use of the latter is still retained in making cream cheeses. Tibull. ii. 3. 15:—

'Tunc fiscella levi detexta est vimine junci,

Raraque per nexus est via facta sero.'

These sieves, mats, or baskets were called calathi, or fiscellae, Virg. Ecl.

x. 71; Georg. iii. 402, which latter must not be confounded with fiscina, supr. 754.

774. quamlibet] Though this word rarely follows the epithet which it qualifies, it seems better to understand quamlibet teneras than quamlibet apta for 'aptissima,' with Gierig.

775. ad annum] Probably for quotannis, κατ' ἐνιαυτόν. Gierig takes it for anno praeterlapso.

777. ad ortus] Thus Aeneas prays with his face to the rising sun. Aen. viii. 68, and 'vota deum victor primo persolvit Eoo,' ib. xi. 4. The custom of facing the east was not introduced, but only adopted by the Christians. It originated in Persian or Indian notions of sun-worship. See on i. 54. Aesch. Agam. 502. The Jewish usage of turning towards the temple was a modification of it. The long-prevalent practice of burying the dead towards the east is mentioned as Athenian by Aelian, Var. Hist. v. 14.

779. camella] A wooden bowl, used for a mixer, or crater. The ancients drank their wine precisely as we drink punch. It was mixed with water in a bowl, placed in the centre, and served out by ladlesful, cyathi. In this case the rustics used milk instead of water.—sapam is new wine boiled down to a third of the quantity, while defrutum was boiled to half. (Pliny, N. H. xiv. 9. 11.)

784. Turba] The number of different opinions. It is of course impossible to say whether so rude and primitive a custom really had any symbolical meaning, or originated in the boisterous sport of shepherds. As regards the bonfires, the latter supposition will sufficiently account for them.

785. vitium Excoquit ;] ‘ Gets rid of the dross.’ Virg. Georg. i. 89: ‘ sive illis omne per ignem excoquitur vitium.’—duce, i. e. ‘ pastore.’ For, as Keightley observes, it is a common custom in the south to lead rather than to drive sheep. And it appears from Tibullus i. l. 35, that the shepherd was purified as well as his flock.

787.] The order of the words is: ‘ an, quia duo discordes dei sunt semina cunctarum rerum.’ See i. 105. Fire and water were not the sole elements of the ancients, but they were in more direct opposition than any others, and every substance was supposed to involve them. Compare Met. i. 432. Aesch. Ag. 634. Varro, L. L. v. § 59.

792. nova fit conjunx.] The marriage torch and the lustral water are well known, as the ‘ ignis et aquae interdictio’ was the denying permission to live in a country, and therefore a sentence of banishment. Propert. v. (iv.) 3. 13—15. Varro, L. L. v. § 61: ‘ duplex causa nascendi ignis et aqua; ideo ea nuptiis in limine adhibentur quod conjungit.’

795. ferirent.] Merkel adopts this reading from very good MSS. The majority give feribant. Cf. audibat, iii. 757; nutribant, Aen. vii. 485.

Num tamen est vero propius, cum condita Roma est,

 Alter Aventinum mane cacumen init.
 Sex Remus, hic volucres bis sex videt ordine: pacto
 Statur, et arbitrium Romulus urbis habet.

801. Num tamen] This is another suggestion; and Keightley adds, 'the most probable one in the poet's eyes.' Num. it is well known, expects a negative answer, and means, 'Surely it is not, is it?' Hence it is sometimes equivalent to a simple negative statement, as Virg. Aen. vii. 295: 'num capti potuere capi?' i. e. 'though captured they are not yet captives.' In the present passage, num has just so much ambiguity as to stand for fortasse tamen. Many MSS. give nunc, or hoc tamen.—jussos, i. e. esse. The subject to supposuisse is not Lares (though Merkel seems by his punctuation to imply this), but incolas.

805.] With saluisse understand et.

804. cessaturae] 'About to be given up.' The Trojan gods imported by Aeneas were transferred from the first settlements to the newly-built city.

806. natali tuo.] The feast of the Palilia.

807. casus] If the text be right, this bears a somewhat unusual meaning. The sense is, 'The occasion of the festival gives scope to the poet to describe the foundation of Rome.' There is another reading, but of little authority, ipse locus causas, &c.

809. frater Numitoris] Amulius. See iii. 67.

812. utrique Convenit;] 'Both are agreed that a city is to be built; the only question is, whether of the two is to be the founder.' Gierig explains convenit by 'com- placet ex pacto.' The simpler sense seems sufficient. See Livy i. 6.

814. fides] 'Reliance,' i. e. popular belief in. See on iv. 204. The account is from Ennius, ap. Cic. de Div. i. 48.

815. Palati.] Palatium (often in the plural Palatia, Propert. v. (iv.) 9. 3), Παλλαντεῖον, was at first the sole site of Rome, which was subsequently extended to the ancient Septimontium, though for a long time this term comprised only the Palatine and certain elevated points on the Caelian and Esquiline hills, on which the Etruscans dwelt; while the settlement on the Capitol and the Quirinal was Sabine, and entirely distinct.

822. terra, &c.] ‘Fossam illam mundum vocabant, in eamque et primitias omnium rerum et particulas terrae, ex qua quisque regione venerat, commixtas deferebant.’ Gierig. Hence our word ‘mound.’

824. fungitur] ‘Fungi’ is ‘to go through with any thing,’ ‘to get quit of it,’ from φυγγάνω (Varro-nianus, p. 390), so that an altar is here said to have the sacred fire burnt out upon it. The MSS. generally give funditur, funditur, or fungitur.

826. alba vacca] Varro, L. L. v. § 143 : ‘Oppida condebant in Latio Etrusco ritu, ut multa; id est, junctis bobus, tauro et vacca interiore, aratro circumagebant sulcum. Hoc faciebant religionis causa die auspicato, ut fossa et muro essent muniti. Terram unde exculpserant, 837. Celer] A feigned character, the representative or Eponymy of the Celeres, or knights of Romulus. —vocarat ; ‘had so named,’ from the quickness and activity he displayed.

839. neve quis] He had given a general order, without any idea either that his own brother would violate it, or that Celer would, in such case, act according to the letter of it.

Dicta Pales nobis; idem Vinalia dicam:
 Una tamen media est inter utramque dies.

843. occupat] See i. 575.—Rutro is the correction of Heinsius. The MSS. give ultra or retro. Varro, L. L. v. § 134: 'rutrum ruitrum, a ruendo,' i. e. a spade or shovel to level and remove earth.

848. sicque, &c.] 'So perish every enemy who shall cross my walls.' This is said, not that he reckoned Remus an enemy, but to justify his orders on the subject.—nec jam, &c., 'and no longer,'—upon which exhibition of feeling the affection he had 'disguised' under the plea of stern duty becomes evident to all. Compare v. 471.

854. Faustulus—Acca] See iii. 55. The mourners consisted of the shepherd and his wife, who had brought up the twins, and the people of the new city, not yet called by the general name of Quirites, who, properly speaking, formed the Sabine settlement distinct from Rome (supra 815).

860. plures] This is evidently added, because semper in the preceding verse could not apply to Augustus alone. Keightley is wrong in explaining it 'still, i. e. a long time.'

862. humeris] The idea of superiority is conveyed by relative stature. To be taller by a head and shoulders was to display the power of controlling the multitude.

863. Vinalia] Varro, L. L. vi. § 16: 'Vinalia a vino. Hic dies

Numina vulgares Veneris celebrate puellae ; 865
 Multa professorum quaestibus apta Venus.
 Poscite thure dato formam populique favorem ;

 Inque suae stirpis maluit urbe coli.
 Cur igitur Veneris festum Vinalia dicant,
 Quaeritis, et quare sit Jovis ista dies.

Jovis, non Veneris; hujus rei cura non levis in Latio; nam aliquot locis vindemiae primum ab sacerdotibus publice fiebant, ut Romae etiam nunc; nam flamen Dialis auspicatur vindemiam, et ut jussit vinum legere, agna Jovi facit, inter quojus exta caesa et porrecta flamen primus vinum legit.' Ibid. § 20: 'Vinalia Rustica dicuntur ante diem xiv. Kalendas Septembres, quod tum Veneri dedicata aedes et horti ei deae dicantur, ac tum fiunt feriati olitores.' It is clear from these extracts, not only that there were two distinct Vinalia, but that they were ordinarily confounded, as the poet has done. But Festus (quoted by Merkel, p. xlvi.) speaks of the second or autumnal Vinalia as sacred to both Jupiter and Venus; whence it is evident that the ancients themselves entertained different opinions. Whether the name of the feast is from vinum or Venus is also a matter of dispute. Perhaps the former Vinalia, which fell in the month of Venus, were originally sacred to that goddess, either alone or in conjunction with Jove; the latter, occurring in autumn, can hardly have been unconnected with the vintage. See inf. 898.

865. vulgares puellae ;] 'meretrices;' who are called professae because they were required to give in their names, and were formally registered as such. But the poet slightly changes the meaning by adding multa. A matrona would be said 'unum amorem profiteri.' Cf. vi. 573.

869. sisymbria] This was probably one of the fragrant labiate plants; perhaps savory or a species of mint. On the coronae sutiles, see v. 335.

871. Templa] The temple of Venus Erycina (Hor. Od. i. 2. 33) 'ad portam Collinam,' dedicated A.U.C. 571. See Livy xl. 34. There was another temple of the same name on the Capitol, built by order of the Sibylline books in the year 536, when the worship of the goddess was transferred to Rome from Eryx, a famous mountain promontory in Sicily. The poet has fallen into some confusion, for he refers this event to the taking of Syracuse by Claudius Marcellus four years later. The Claudius here mentioned is celebrated as 'Siculae victor telluris' by Propert. iii. (iv.) 18. 33.

875. vivacis] See on ii. 625.

882. Et vel, &c.] ‘And though powerful even in cavalry, he was yet greater (vel major) in his infantry.’ Amata was the wife of King Latinus. Mezentius, an ally of Turnus, was an Etruscan Lucumo, formerly King of Caere or Agylla. Virg. Aen. viii. 482, &c. He is described as ‘contemptor divum,’ ibid. vii. 648.

885. Stat] ‘constat, non parvo pretio ; bene de vobis merui.’

888. lacubus] ‘The vats into which the grape juice flowed from the press were so called. Sup. iii. 558 : ‘inque cavos ierant tertia musta lacus.’

890. Quam velit, &c.] ‘Aeneas will wish that my request had been refused, when he finds himself conquered by me.’

893. Tyrrheno regi] By Mezentius the Etruscan king. The ancients, as before observed, confounded Tyrrhenians and Etruscans. — The wines of Latium were the best in Italy, with the exception of the Falernian from Campania. The former produced the Caecuban, Formian, and Setine. Becker, Gallus, p. 492, carelessly asserts, that ‘all the best wines grew in Campania.’ — Hosticus, it may be added, seems to have been properly used as a distinctive epithet of ager, Varro L. L. v. § 33.

902. In medio cursu] This is inconsistent with iii. 877 : ‘tempora nocturnis aequa diurna ferēs ;’ for the equinox is the middle of spring, March 26, or vii. Kal. April, not

vii. Kal. Maii. Merkel explains the several mistakes in this passage, by supposing that it was written for the former month, when the Ram really does set, and rainy weather commences, but was transferred to the present place by some ignorant grammarian, because the legend of the ram had been just before related (iii. 851, seqq.), and that the distich, iii. 877, 878, was substituted in its place. Aries sets March 26, and the Dog star iv. Cal. Maii, or April 28. Virgil, Georg. i. 218. Hence exoritur Canis in this place is a positive blunder.—Signa dant imbres is rather ambiguous. Gierig explains ‘ostendunt se, cadunt.’ We have ‘signa dabunt imbres,’ i. 316, where, as in the present case, the simplest sense seems to be, ‘you will be apprised of the fact (i.e. the setting or rising) by the rain that usually falls at this time.’

905. Nomento] The Via Nomentana led into the territory of the Sabines, who seem to have introduced the worship of Robigo or Robigus, the god of mildew or blight. But according to the Fasti Praenestini (Merkel, p. cli.) the grove of Robigo was on the Via Claudia, which lay quite in a different direction. Merkel attempts to solve the difficulty thus, though he admits that there may have been two distinct places and ceremonies: ‘Fac viam Claudiam incoepisse ab aliqua porta praeter Flaminiam, quae aut unicum, aut in libris pontificum Catulariae nomen habuerit, atque inde ad pontem Milvium perduxisse: si Ovidius Nomentana via relicta per actus semitasque hortos suos petiit, necesse est intra miliarium quintum viam Clodium attigerit.’ The Catularia porta is unknown: Festus says that near it dogs were sacrificed (catuli) to avert the evil influence of the dog-star. See inf. 936.

907. Flamen] i. e. ‘Quirinalis,’ inf. 910.

911. Aspera] From the roughness of the blight, which is believed to be a kind of fungus, he speaks of leve cacumen and scabras manus, inf. 921. Virg. Georg. i. 150: ‘Mox et frumentis labor additus, ut mala culmos Esset robigo.’

915. notasti,] The word is used in a bad sense, like habere notam, to be degraded by the Censor’s decision.

Nec venti tantum Cereri nocuere, nec imbres,

Nec sic marmoreo pallet adusta gelu,

917. Nec tantum — Quantum,] Compare Georg. ii. 376: 'Frigora nec tantum—quantum illi nocuere greges.'—On adusta, see i. 680.

919. udos :] Gierig cités Pliny, N. H. xviii. 68. 3, in defence of this opinion, that a hot sun, suddenly drying the wet leaves, causes blight both in vines and corn. Elsewhere he thinks that dew in close valleys is in fault: but the opinion of the ancients on questions of this kind, which only the microscope can determine, is of no value.

923. ferrum.] It is evident that they thought rust on metals was of the same nature as blight on plants. Virg. Georg. i. 495: 'exesa inveniet scabra robigine pila.'

926. otia agit.] Cf. i. 68. Some good copies read agit; but the indicative conveys a compliment to Augustus.

928. situs.] The word is from sino, and means (l.) the spot where a thing is suffered to lie, the site; (2.) the consequences of being allowed to lie by, decay, rust, mouldiness, &c. Compare with this passage Tibull. i. 10. 49, seqq.

933. a dextra mantele] A napkin or towel hung from his right hand. This was probably a common appendage to the officiating priest in a sacrifice. It is preserved to this day in the ecclesiastical vestment called the maniple, which was originally used for wiping the face or fingers.—solutis villis, with long and loose nap. Virgil has 'tonsis mantelia villis,' Georg. iv. 377, 'with closely shorn or well clipt nap;' and Horace (Epist. i. l. 95), 'tunica pexa,' opposed to 'trita,' 'threadbare.'

936. obscaenae] The word properly means that which is unsightly, disgusting, or offensive to the senses. Originally, it must have implied something startling, or brought violently and suddenly into view, from ob and scena. Varro, L. L. vii. § 96, defends the orthography, remarking that 'in pluribus verbis A ante E alii ponunt, alii non.' In § 97 he says, 'turpe ideo obscaenum, quod nisi in scaenam palam dici non potest.' It is used of dogs, Georg. i. 470; of an old woman, Aen. vii. 417; and frequently of birds. It must be observed that in hot countries dogs often present a very disgusting appearance, from the loss of hair by vermin or other causes. Horace has 'canis immundus,' Epist. i. 2. 26. See inf. v. 140. There seems to have been a general opinion that dogs were unclean animals: οὐδὲ καθαρῆειν ὄντο παντάπασιν οἱ παλαιοὶ τὸ ζῶον, Plut. Q. R. § 111.

939. Icarium] Properly it was the daughter of Icarus, Erigone, who had a dog, Μαῖρα (Apollodor. iii. 14. 7), afterwards changed into Canicula, which some identify with Sirius, others with Procyon (Hor. Od. iii. 29. 18) or the forerunner of the dog by eleven days.

940. praecipitur] Virg. Ecl. iii. 98: 'si lac praeceperit aestus, Ut nuper, frustra pressabimus ubera palmis.' Gierig rightly explains 'ante maturitatem arescit.' But in Propert. v. (iv.) 2. 11,—'seu quia vertentis fructum praecepimus anni, —it seems to mean 'fructus primitias percipere,' though Merkel explains 'docere quomodo fructus percipiatur.' In Aen. x. 277 'litora praecipere' is for occupare. 'Praecepta' means 'advice taken before acting;' hence by the association of contrast 'praecipere' is said of him who gives, not of him who takes such advice.

943. Tithonia] Aurora, wife of Tithonus, who, properly speaking, was not frater, but a more distant relative of Assaracus. Ovid either follows another account, or wishes to include the latter in the pedigree of Augustus.

947. Exit] Not 'ends,' but 'is continued into,' for in fact the Floralia extended to May 3. Compare v. 185: 'incipis Aprili, transis in tempora Maii.'—joci, &c. See v. 331.

949. Vesta] Augustus, as Pontifex Maximus (iii. 419), was bound to dwell near the temple of Vesta; so that either he must go to Vesta, or Vesta to him. He preferred the latter alternative, and gave up part of the Palatium (which in his time meant 'the palace; see sup. 815)

Phoebus habet partem, Vestae pars altera cessit ;

as a new temple of Vesta, whereas the old one stood on the Capitol, and was shared in common with Pallas. See vi. 455. For the new porticos and library built by Augustus as a temple of Apollo in the same pile, see Propert. iii. 23.—cognati Limine. Compare iii. 426.

953. praetexta quercu] See on i. 614. Martial, viii. 82. 7:—

‘Non quercus te sola decet, nec
 laurea Phoebi :

Fiat et ex hedera civica nostra
 tibi.’

Hence it appears that the custom was continued till the time of Domitian. Both the quercus and the laurus of the Palatium are mentioned Trist. iii. l. 36—40. The two trees intertwined form a chaplet on the obverse of some of our more recent coins.

Ipse autem sub finem iudicium suum cohibet. Ita loco huic dramatis formam dedit.' Gierig.

5. diversas] See on i. 132.

8. Grata] 'Quibus oblectantur, unde hauriunt Musae.' Gierig. Pegasus sprang from the blood of Medusa, whence he is called in mock heroic strain 'Gorgoneus caballus.' Juven. iii. 118.—signa, 'vestigia,' because the horses' hoof cleft the rock. Aganippis is here an adjective of Greek inflexion. Properly, Hippocrene and Aganippe were distinct springs.

11. tria corpora] See i. 105. He mentions in this place only three elements, earth, air, and water. But the fourth, ignis, is included in caelum; and he enumerates the sun and moon, inf. 15, 16, as parts of the fiery aether. Cic de Nat. Deor. i. 37. 103: 'locus suus est cuique proprius, ut terra infimum teneat, hanc inundet aqua, superior aeri, ignibus altissima ora reddatur.' Ibid. ii. 15. 41: 'ardor caelestis, qui aether vel caelum nominatur.'

15. Sol quoque] Not only the aether rose aloft by its lightness, but the sun and moon, being of fire, and less dense than the earth, also left it and 'started off,' exsiluerunt.

Sed neque terra diu caelo, nec caetera Phoebos
 Sidera cedebant: par erat omnis honos.
 Saepe aliquis solio quod tu, Saturne, tenebas,
 Ausus de media plebe sedere deus;
 Et latus Oceano, quisquis deus advena, junxit,
 Et Themis extremo saepe recepta loco est;
 Donec Honor, placidoque decens Reverentia vultu
 Corpora legitimis imposuere toris.

17. terra caelo.] 'Miscet partes mundi et deos; illae enim e cosmographia antiqua personae erant divinae.' Gierig.

20. de media plebe.] He borrows the notion of the populus, or original Roman citizens, and the plebs, afterwards admitted to the same rights, to express the dii majorum gentium, or elder Hesiodic divinities, and those of inferior grade.

21. quisquis.] The MSS. appear to agree in quisquam, which, as Dr. Donaldson first remarked, Varro-nianus, p. 326, is a solecism, since aliquis (19) is 'some one,' quisquam 'any one at all,' which would have been correct only if nec quisquam had been used, or in an interrogation implying a negative (iv. 115). He reads the verse thus:—'Et latus Oceano, quisquis deus advena, junxit,' i. e. 'whatever god happened to come up.' Merkel has edited quivis. The balance of probability seems in favour of quisquis having been corrupted into quisquam, from a false view of the poet's meaning.

22. Et Themis.] This is the reading of Merkel from two or three second-rate copies. The rest (with one exception, et Tethys, which Keightley admits) give et Thetis. The latter cannot be right; for the context requires that one of the superior and elder gods should be named, which Themis was (Hes. Theog. 135), and Tethys too (ibid. 136), but Thetis was not. Now et Tethys involves a double false quantity. Virg. Georg. i. 31: 'Teque sibi generum Tethys emat omnibus undis.' Hence in the Aldine the order is transposed, Tethys et, and this is the ordinary reading. In latus junxit and extremo—i. e. imo—loco, the places assigned to the guests at a Roman banquet are clearly alluded to.

24. legitimis toris.] The idea evidently is, that Honour was wedded to Reverence, and their offspring was Majesty. 'By this term the Romans seem originally to have meant the dignity and power of the Populus Romanus, as distinguished from the auctoritas of the Senate. It was then applied to the dignity of magistrates and others, and finally was appropriated by the emperors.' Keightley. Dr. Arnold has the following valuable remark, Hist. of Rome, vol. i. p. 94: 'The most striking point in the Roman character, and that which has so permanently influenced the condition of mankind, was their love of institutions and of order, their reverence for law, their habit of considering the individual as living only for the society of which he was a member. The absence of this feeling, so often in modern times mistaken for a love of liberty, may be traced in the émeutes which occasionally disturb the peace of Europe. The Roman inherited it from the Pelasgi; those who still retain most of it are either Celts or their mixed descendants. The excess or abuse of majestas was exhibited in the servile flattery of the Emperors.'

26. Quaque die.] See on iv. 622. The sense is rightly given by Gierig

- Hinc sata Majestas, quae mundum temperat omnem, 25
 Quaque die partu est edita, magna fuit.
- Nec mora : consedit medio sublimis Olympo, Aurea, purpureo conspicienda sinu.
- Consedere simul Pudor et Metus. Omne videres Numen ad hanc vultus composuisse suos. 30
- Protinus intravit mentes suspectus honorum ;
 Fit pretium dignis, nec sibi quisque placet.
- Hic status in caelo multos permansit in annos,
 Dum senior fatis excidit arce deus.
- Terra feros partus, immania monstra, Gigantas 35
 Edidit, ausuros in Jovis ire domum.
- Mille manus illis dedit, et pro cruribus angues, Atque ait, In magnos arma movete deos.
- Exstruere hi montes ad sidera summa parabant,
 Et magnum bello sollicitare Jovem. 40
- Fulmina de caeli jaculatus Juppiter arce Vertit in auctores pondera vasta suos.
- His bene Majestas armis defensa deorum

- Assidet inde Jovi : Jovis est fidissima custos, 45
 Et praestat sine vi sceptrata tenenda Jovi.
- Venit et in terras : coluerunt Romulus illam
 Et Numa, mox alii, tempore quisque suo.

‘nempe majestas non crescit ab exiguis initiis.’

28. purpureo sinu.] See on ii. 310. There is an allusion to the latus clavus. ‘Majesty’ took her official seat as a magistrate, with her assessors, Pudor and Metus, on the right hand and the left. See i. 251.

30. composuisse] A person was said to be compositus in tristitiam, in venerationem, in obsequium, &c., when he put on an unreal or feigned expression, and so acted a part to deceive. In this passage the gods are alleged to have borrowed a dignified aspect and demeanour from Majesty.

31. suspectus honorum ;] ‘A looking up to, a respect for, dignities.’—nec sibi, &c. A certain reserve and self-control followed as a natural result of awe.

39. ad sidera summa] This is a common notion of the later poets ; but it arose from a mistaken view of the old myth, according to which the gods lived on mount Olympus, and Pelion and Ossa were rolled up against its sides by way of stepping-stones, not piled one on the top of the other. (Dr. Smith’s Classical Dict., in v. Olympus.)

45. custos,] The best security which Jove possesses against rebellion for the future is the respect in which his sovereignty is held.—for tenenda Merkel reads tenere, with a minority of the MSS., and those not the best.

49. in honore pio tuetur ;] ‘Facit ut pietate parentes prosequantur liberi.’

50. pueris] Pudor is the attribute of youth, and attended majesty, supra 29. Youth too is an object of respect : ‘maxima debetur puero reverentia.’ Juven.

51. commendat.] ‘It is this which gives dignity to the office of the magistrate and to the triumph.’ These four verses (49—52) are fine both in composition and sentiment. Honours, says the poet, would be nothing, were they not regarded with reverential awe and respect by the multitude.

57, seqq.] Another opinion was that Maius was derived a majoribus, the elders upon whom devolved the councils of the state, as Junius was a junioribus, from the fighting men. Supra i. 41 ; inf. vi. 85.

61. illa] Aetas is easily supplied from the context ; or ruga senilis may be meant.

63. post annos seros,] In those times none could be a senator, nullus patuit curia, till he was old.—Nomen mite, nomen significans maturam aetatem, senatus a senectute. The metaphor is from mellow wine, or perhaps ripe fruits.

66. unde] Sc. quando magistratus capessere possent.

67. medius juvenum,] This place was conceded to the senior, as much by way of officium, protecting or escorting him, as with a view to hear his conversation and instructions.—interior, ‘next to the wall.’ Horace has ‘comes exterior,’ Sat. ii. 5. 17. This was claudere or tegere latus, Juven. iii. 131. The Romans had a tradition that in ‘the good old times’ age was treated with much greater respect. Juven. xiii. 54 :—

‘Credebant hoc grande nefas, et morte piandum, Si juvenis vetulo non assurrexerat, et si
 Barbato cuicunque puer.’

71. selecta pectora] So the first senators are called 'rustica corda,' Propert. v. (iv.) l. 12.—hoc vidit, i. e. he perceived and acted on the instinctive reverence paid to old age. Cf. i. 37.

76. sustinuisse] 'And the grandson may have been unable to resist the importunity of his grandsire.'

77. propositi pignus] 'Proof of my proposition.'—successor honoris, i. e. 'tituli,' the month which succeeds to, and is thus directly contrasted with, the honourable name of Maius a majoribus. Gierig and Keightley read praepositi, and make it agree with honoris. Almost all the MSS. give successit, which affords a fair sense: 'A great proof of the superior honour paid to May follows in the inferior honour of the name Junius.'

80. sui chori:] 'Prima chori, quia praeerat epico carmini.' Gierig. Keightley more correctly understands 'of her party,' i. e. of those who approved her view; comparing ver. 53.

81. Titanida] Themis is called by Aeschylus Τιτανίς, Prom. 893, and Tethys was of the same parents, Uranus and Terra. Supra 22.

85. Maia] See iv. 174.

90. Luna prior.] See i. 469, where also the story of Evander and his prophetic mother has been given in detail.

92. impositos] sc. navi. Compare ii. 279.

97. Et matri, &c.] 'Paret Carmentae duabus ex causis, quia et mater, et vates.' Gierig.—Nonaacrius. See ii. 275.

100. alipedis dei] sc. Mercury his father. See i. 471.

101. cinctutis,] If we compare ii. 284, and Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 68, who describes the Luperci as γυμνοὶ ἐν περιζώμασι, we shall see that the word means, in this passage at least, if not always, 'with a cloth tied round the loins.' In Hor. Epist. ad Pison. 50, 'cinctuti Cethegi' is explained 'naked from the waist upwards.' The word is here in the dative case.

102. vellera secta] See ii. 445.—celebres, iv. 391.

104. furibus apte,] Mercury was worshipped by the Greeks as κλοπαῖος, the patron of cunning roguery, which they were too apt to regard rather as an accomplishment than a vice. The moral of the well-known story of Hermes in the Homeric hymn is to represent the most audacious villany as a witty joke; and we must confess that in the Odyssey lying seems to be represented as a virtue. See inf. v. 672, seqq.

105. pietas] Another proof of his affection was to commemorate his mother and her sisters by the number of strings in the lute,—a strange monument to our minds, but not so to the imaginative and highly musical Greek.

108.] The order of the words seems to be, 'omnis pars habet idem turbac,'—i. e. 'unaquaeque ratio habet aequalem numerum sibi assentientium.' On idem with a genitive see i. 46. The opinions respectively stated by Polymnia, Uranie, and Calliopea, had each two of the other sisters in favour of it, as we may infer from 54.

109. Gratia, &c.] He replies to his own question quid faciam? He will not venture to offend six Muses by preferring any three; but like a prudent poet entreats that the favour of none will be withheld. Accordingly he leaves the obscure question still undetermined. Keightley says, 'Maii seems to have been the female of the god Maius, who, as Macrobius tells us (i. 12), was held to be Jupiter by the Tusculans, but who was probably a telluric power, like Saturn and others.' In Greek, μαῖα is equivalent to bona mater, i. e. Bona Dea, inf. 148, or Terra.

111. Ab Jove] 'A Capella, Jovis nutrice.' The usual epic commencement, 'ab Jove principium,' &c. The goat, Capella, a constellation comprising the hoedi, her two kids, is called 'Olenia,' either because it is in the left arm of Auriga (Cic. de Nat. Deor. ii. 43), or because Amalthea was daughter of Olenus, or from a town Olene in Achaea, where Jupiter was reared. Apollodorus writes it Olenus, i. 8. 4; cf. infra 251.

127. fertile Fecit ;] Changed it into a cornucopia. Hor. Od. i. 17. 14:

'— Hinc tibi copia

129. Maiaie Kalendae] The names of the months are always used as adjectives, never as substantives; at least, mensis is always understood when they appear to be the latter.

The Lares praestites, προστατήριοι, as the name implies, were the guardians of the state, as contrasted with the Lar Familiaris, or household god of every private hearth. Plut. Quaest. Rom. § 51: πραιστίτης μὲν οἱ προεστῶτες εἰσι. There were many shrines or chapels to them in various places of the city, and in each of these (as observed on ii. 615) two images were placed, to which, it appears from ver. 146, and Hor. Od. iv. 5. 34, 'et Laribus tuum miscet Nu-men,' a third of Augustus was sometimes added. See Arnold, Hist. of Rome, i. p. 80.

131. Ara erat] This is the reading of by far the greater number of MSS. Merkel gives vota erat from one inferior copy. Gierig has edited voverat illa quidem Curius, which is found in some MSS. There does not seem sufficient reason for rejecting the vulgate, though it is certainly not free from suspicion. 'The Sabines of old had indeed an altar to the Lares ; but it has long ago vanished.' Varro explicitly states, L. L. v. § 74, that Titus Tatius dedicated at Rome altars to the Lares, among several other divinities.

136—139. canis] Hence we see the true meaning of the dog so often carved at the feet of sepulchral effigies, viz. as a symbol of fidelity and allegiance. Plutarch (Q. R. § 51) suggests that they were clothed in dog-skin, and had a dog at their feet as being ποινιμοὶ δαίμονες, and set to track offenders ; or as φοβεροὶ μὲν τοῖς ἀλλοτρίοις, ἥπιοι δὲ καὶ πρᾶοι τοῖς συνοικοῦσιν.

140. Compita] The Compitalia were celebrated in honour of the public Lares. Varro, L. L. vi. § 25 : 'Compitalia, dies attributus Laribus Compitalibus ; ideo ubi viae competunt, tum in competis sacrificatur.'—Grata cani. Dogs even to this day, in some southern towns less cleanly than our own, wander about the streets without owners, and act as scavengers by devouring offal. See supra iv. 936.

143. bina signa] viz. those originally consecrated, ver. 129.

145. Genium ducis,] The words Lar and Genius seem to have been nearly synonymous. See ii. 631. Dux, as elsewhere, is for imperator.—tradidit, 'restitutos et ornatos civibus dedit.' See Suet. Oct. § 31.

147. Augustus mensis] It was formerly called sextilis. The new name was given A. U. C. 746.

148. Diva Bona] A mysterious deity, but probably (see sup. 109) the same as Terra, 'Mother Earth,' Γῆ Μητέρα, Δημήτηρ, or Ceres, to whom the similar festival of the Thesmophoria was celebrated by the Greeks, to the exclusion of males. Tibull. i. 6. 22: 'Sacra Bonae, maribus non adeunda, Deae.' Plutarch says that the women sent out of the house not only their husbands, but every male animal when performing the secret rites. Even myrtle was prohibited in the temple, as being a plant sacred to Venus (Quaest. Rom. § 20). She was connected, how it is not agreed, with Faunus, and was doubtless an Italian deity adapted to Pelasgic symbolism.

149. nomina fecit—] It was called 'Sacrum Saxum.' Most editions place the stop after nativa. On a jutting peak of the Aventine, and on the very spot where Remus had stood to take the auguries (iv. 815), a temple was erected to Bona Dea by an unknown Vestal of the Claudian house. It was one of the sacred edifices repaired by Livia, wife of Augustus. See i. 648. The MSS. generally give Crassorum, in ver. 155.

158. ex omni parte] 'Et pietate in deos et pudicitia.' There was a great attachment between Livia and Augustus, as Suetonius says, Oct. § lxii.: 'dilexit et probavit unice ac perseveranter.' See i. 649. Virum is objectionable as closely following maritum, and doubly so from the 'homoeoteleuton' of the preceding pentameter. This is, indeed, occasionally found, as inf. 170—172; 436—8; ii. 366—368; and is perhaps in some cases an oversight. In 178 at least half the MSS. give leae for ferae. In the present passage none will deny that the ear is offended. But there are many instances in the Fasti of hasty writing, the first book alone having been finally revised.

159. Hyperionis] Aurora, daughter of Hyperion (i. 385) and Thea. Apollodor. i. 2. 2.

161. Argestes] ἀργέστης, properly ἀργήστης, 'the white, clear, wind,' λαμπρός ἄνεμος, as 'albus Notus,' Hor. Od. i. 7. 15: 'albus Iapyx,' ib. iii. 27. 20. The north-west wind was so called by the Greeks, the Caurus of the Romans. —mulcebit. This word means 'to stroke down' hair, &c., and so 'to calm, smooth, allay,' in a secondary sense. See iv. 551: 'terque manu permulsit cum.' A similar word in its primary signification is stringere

(i. 322), with this important difference, that it means to pass the hand over any thing in the wrong direction, and so to roughen up, strip off, or produce any violent friction.

162. a Capreis] 'From Capreae' (Capri, in the bay of Naples). The reading is doubtful; but Keightley properly remarks that aquis is the dative. 'The ships bound for Egypt properly sailed from Puteoli, in that bay, at this time of the year. By looking in the map it will be seen that as soon as they had passed Capreae they were in the open sea, and that the north-west wind would carry them direct to the strait of Messina.' Gierig has a Calabris, which he explains of the voyage across the Hadriatic.

163. crepuscula] Varro, L. L. vi. § 5, and vii. § 77, says that this is a Sabine word, meaning 'doubtful,' and signifies the dusk of evening, 'quod id dubium tempus noctis an diei sit.' Lucretius, v. 1295, has 'creperi certamina belli.'—toto de grege. He seems to follow an opinion which prevailed that 'Υάδες was from ὕς, and according to which this constellation was called suculae. But, as Gierig observes, it is much more probably from ὑεῖν, 'to rain.' Ovid himself (166) thinks fit to add the Greek etymology. See on vi. 195. Apollodorus, iii. 4. 3, also makes them certain nymphs of Nyssa, who received the infant Bacchus.

172. Edidit,] sc. Atlanti.

173. formidine] 'Nunc non est metus, sed funis venatorius, versicoloribus plumis distinctus, quo cervi territi in plagas extensas irruerant.' Gierig. Virg. Georg. iii. 371:—

'Hos non immissis canibus, non cassibus ullis,
 Puniceaeve agitant pavidos formidine pinnae.'

Aen. xii. 750: 'cervum puniceae septum formidine pinnae.' Hyes, or Hyas, is perhaps another version of the fable of Adonis. He was connected also with Atys or Attes, for "Υης Ἄττης was the well-known cry of the initiators. See inf. 734.

182. Illam] i. e. 'sororum pietas dedit illis coelum, sed Hyades ab amisso fratre appellatae sunt.'

184. mense priore] See iv. 947. The poet now returns to the Floralia, which extended over six days, and ended, as did other great games (see iv. 680), with the opening of the circus and the theatre. The description which follows is very beautiful ; but Flora must be considered as an Italian deity, from flos, and not a corruption from Χλωρίς. The fondness for Greek etymologies must have been strong in a poet who could prefer the latter to the former derivation.

187. mensum,] This form is used infra 424, and Met. viii. 500, as Gierig observes. Varro, L. L. viii. § 66, notices the double form civitatum, parentum, and -ium.

189. in hunc] sc. in Maium. See on ii. 755. Merkel (p. clx.) explains, 'hoc est, circenses tum fieri, cum post scenicos palma data sit.' — clamata, 'proclamata.' Compare Trist. ii. 505, where, speaking of acting mimes, he says :—

'Cumque fefellit amans aliqua novitate maritum, Plauditur, et magno palma favore datur.'

Whether any prize was given to the most popular drama, as with the Greeks, or whether 'the palm' merely means 'the meed of praise,' does not seem clear. Perhaps, indeed, the poet had the circus principally in view, in connexion with which the palm is frequently mentioned, as Georg. i. 59; sup. iv. 392. — cum Circi munere, &c. 'May my poem find as much favour with the people.'

197. Campi Felicis,] The 'isles of the blest' were not wholly imaginary, but they so called the beautiful group of the Canary islands, which had early become known to the Greeks by hearsay from Phenician navigators. See Humboldt, Cosmos, ii. p. 130. The 'golden apples' of the Hesperides were of course the oranges which grew there; and there are reasons for thinking that they are indigenous to those islands.

200. repperit] 'Obtained,' εὑρετο. 'Pro, maritum mihi reperit, maluit, ut minus vulgare, generum matri reperit.' Gierig.

204. praemia ferre.] Boreas had carried away Orithyia, daughter of Erechtheus. Propert. iv. (iii.) 7. 13: 'infelix Aquilo, raptae timor Orithyiae.' Met. vi. 677. In the most ancient times any sudden disappearance was attributed to 'the Harpies,' or to a whirlwind. See inf. vi. 131.

Hom. Od. xx. 77: τόφρα δὲ τὰς κούρας ἄρπυιαι ἀνηρείψαντο.

211. implevit] This is said with peculiar beauty, as the Zephyr was popularly supposed to wake the flowers.—flore, for floribus, by a not unfrequent use of the Latin poets. We even find 'innumera ovis,' Tibull. ii. 2. 42; 'innumerus leo,' Martial, viii. 55. 2.

226. alter et alter] 'Double;' the image in the stream was not another, but a reflection of himself. Met. iii. 339. The following legends of Crocus, Attis, and Adonis, son of Cinara, are given ibid. iv. 283; x. 104 and 735.

229. Mars editus] This legend, Keightley remarks, is not recorded by any other writer, unless Festus, quoted by Gierig, in v. Gradivus, alludes to it, in assigning that name, 'quia gramine sit ortus.' The ancients fully believed in the possibility of spontaneous generation. Thus Virgil tells us that mares conceive from the wind, Georg. iii. 275.—adhuc nesciat. See inf. 248.

233. Oceano] The vague ideas respecting Ocean (as contrasted with mare, the inland sea, and the only sea either Greeks or Romans were directly concerned with) led to some curious opinions, which were immediately embodied by an imaginative people in a mythological form. As every river had its river-god, so the great exterior stream, flowing as they thought, from some vague information respecting the great north Atlantic current, round the earth, had its own deity Oceanus.

There were only two points of contact with this outer sea certainly known to the ancients; that on the west, through the straits of Gibraltar, and that on the east, the Erythraean Sea, or Indian Ocean. Even the latter, which they called the 'Red Sea,' because it was coloured by the eastern rays (Propert. iv. (iii.) 13. 16. Georgic. iii. 359), was not ascertained to be the outer ocean, as India and Africa were believed by many to be united by an unknown southern continent, inclosing the 'sinus magnus.' See on iii. 465. Humboldt, Cosmos, ii. p. 268. But they spoke of the whole world, from east to west, as included between these two seas, 'utroque ab littore,' Georgic. iii. 33. The abode of Ocean was placed in the west simply because they were much more familiar with the ocean, at least better acquainted with its position, on that side. Otherwise, we should have looked for the 'isles of the blest' rather in the sun-lands of the east, than in the dark Cimmerian obscurity of the west. But, as remarked, sup. 197, the tradition of certain western lands, viz. the Canaries, was too definite to be overcome. One of these, Teneriffe, was the famous Atlas, bearing the clouds on its lofty cone, as the giant was said to bear the heaven on his shoulders. It appears, therefore, consistently said that Juno stopped

245. in cursu :] 'Nondum finita.' Inf. vi. 362 : 'spes erat in cursu.' Vox is clearly that of Juno ; habebam Flora says of herself.

251. mihî missus] 'Ad me olim missus.'—Oleniis, supra 113. The notion of particular plants having some very potent, and, in fact, impossible, effect was a favourite one. The $\mu\acute{\omega}\lambda\nu$ of Homer, Od. x. 305, and the amellus of the Georgics, iv.

271, will occur to the reader. Similarly, inf. vi. 750, a herb could restore the dead to life. Aelian, Var. Hist. i. 10, mentions a plant in Crete which makes arrows drop out of wounded goats : the 'dictamnus' of Cicero, de Nat. Deor. ii. 49. 126. Aen. xii. 412.

257. Thracen] The Thracians were held to be the warlike nation of antiquity, and especially devoted to the cultus of Mars. Georg. iv. 462 : 'Rhesi Mavortia tellus.' Her. ii. 83 : 'Armiferam Thracen qui regat alter erit.' Aen. xii. 335.

flowers chiefly for making festive garlands ; and they do not seem to have appreciated them, as we do, as beautiful objects, or to have cultivated them much in gardens. Roses, myrtle, and violets for-banquets were generally purchased. See Martial x. 60 ; inf. 353. 344.—arva. Fields used for growing any kinds of crops are arva, while ager is territory measured out and occupied, but chiefly used for grazing. The former term is, however, comprehended in the latter. See Hor. Ep. i. 16. 2 and 4.

266. eventum habent.] ‘ Experience the result of this season,’ i. e. prove by the amount of the crop whether the blossoms have duly set in spring. Virg. Georg. iv. 142 :—

‘ Quotque in flore novo pomis se fertilis arbor
 Induerat, totidem auctumno matura tenebat.’

Poma was a general term for fleshy and juicy fruits, as for the fig, sup. ii. 256. On oleae see the anecdote in Cic. de Div. i. 49, § 111.

268. advena Nile.] See ii. 67. Perhaps in this place advena means ‘ foreign,’ to express the imported culture of lentils. Georg. i. 228.

270. nebulae] The filmy scum which settles on the top of new wine when set to clear itself. The Greeks used the term ἀνθος, whence οἶνος ἀνθοσπίος, Arist. Plut. 807, meaning, however, the fragrant smell, as we talk of the ‘ bouquet’ of wine. But this is absurdly attributed to the goddess of flowers.

273. idem facimus] ‘ Meum quoque munus est, cum juvenes florent.’ Clærig.

279. instrumenta] This word often bears a sense widely different from our term ‘ instrument.’ Properly, it is any thing ‘ quo quid instruitur,’ ‘ an outfit’ (Trist. i. l. 9), or ‘ stock in trade,’ sometimes ‘ furniture,’ as ‘ instrumentum et supellex,’ Suet. Oct. § lxxiii. In this way we must understand Tacitus, Agric. 14 : ‘ veterae jam pridem recepta populi Romani consuetudine, ut haberet instrumenta servitutis et reges,’—‘ to make even kings take a part in subjecting nations to Rome.' Suet. Oct. § lxxi. : 'Alexandria capta nihil sibi praeter unum murrhinum calicem ex instrumento regio retinuit.'

281. locuples,] i. e. 'loco plenus.' But the word is not confined to the wealthy in land. Horace has 'mancipiis locuples,' Epist. i. 6. 39.—jam, sc. 'jam tum.'

283. Venerat in morem] It had become a custom with the pecuarii or graziers to occupy the public land (ager, sup. 261) without paying vectigal or rent to the state.—populi saltus, the unappropriated woodlands let out for pasturage. Nemus is used in this sense, from νέμειν. Propert. i. 14. 5. Varro, L. L. v. § 36 : 'quos agros non colebant propter silvas aut id genus, ubi pecus posset pasci et possidebant, ab usu suo saltus nominarunt. Haec etiam Graeci νομῆς, nostri nemora.' (The derivation, however, is wrongly given, saltus being the Greek ἄλλος.) Virg. Georg. iii. 143 : 'saltibus in vacuis pascant.'

285. sua publica] 'Their interest in the common land.' Any one was allowed to feed cattle where he pleased, and without being fined for a trespass. Vulgus is not here, as elsewhere, for plebs as opposed to populus, but means the citizens generally.—inertis erat, 'was considered slow,' a proof of want of spirit.

288. Publicios :] Lucius and Marcus Publ. Malleolus, who were aediles A. U. C. 513.—defuit ante. Information had before been given, but no aedile dared to act upon it. Gierig, however, observes that fines had before been inflicted, in the year of the city 457, and were again in 462, referring to Livy x. 23 and 47.

289. recipit :] The informer was said deferre, and the people who brought the matter under consideration at the comitia recipere rem or causam. Gierig quotes Livy, xxxiii. 42 : 'Aediles plebis multos pecuarios ad populi iudicium adduxerunt ; ex eorum multatitia pecunia aedem in insula [see ii. 194] Fauni fecerunt.' The fine so imposed was evidently regarded as in part at least sacred money ; and Faunus was selected for the honour of a temple, because he was the patron of all kinds of cattle, which had been the cause of the offence.

292. ludos novos.] For the above reason a new temple was erected on the present occasion to Flora, 'quia et arva atque pascua ejus numen tangebant, vs. 262.' Gierig. Tacit. Ann. ii. 49 : 'isdem temporibus (sc. A. D. 17, Tiberius) deum aedes vetustate aut igni abolitas coeptasque ab Augusto dedicavit, Libero Liberaeque et Cereri juxta circum maxinum, quam Aulus Postumius dictator voverat ; eodemque in loco aedem Florae ab Lucio et Marco Publiciis aedilibus constitutam.' The word lucar, and perhaps also lucrum, was derived from lucus. The former was a gratuity paid to the actors out of the 'grove-money.' Plut. Quaest. R. § 88, gives the right explanation, ὅτι τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλσέων πρόσσδον εἰς τὰς θεὰς ἀνήλισκον. To this the poet alludes in ludi novi, which included perhaps both the circus and the theatre. Tacit. Ann. i. 77 : 'de modo lucaris et adversus lasciviam fautorum multa decernuntur ;' where see Ritter's note. Varro derives lucrum 'a luendo,' L. L. v. § 176.

293. locant clivum,] i. e. 'munendum.' They devoted a part of the proceeds to making by contract a road up the Aventine, which Keightley says is still in existence. Varro, L. L. v. § 158.—'clivos Publicius ab aedilibus plebei Publici qui eum publice aedificarunt.'

295. annua facta ;] The poet had imagined that the ludi novi (ver. 292.) were from the first an annual festival. Flora shows that they were only made so by way of appeasing the anger she had conceived on account of the neglect of her, and that it was not until the consulship of Postumius Albinus and Laenas, A. U. C.

579, or nearly seventy years later, that the Floralia were regularly celebrated every year.

298. ambitiosa] 'Quae cultum studiose affectat.' Gierig.

300. blanda] Expiatoria. See Hor. Od. iii. 23. 19.

304. Solvitur] 'Luitur ;' as the Greeks use τινεῖν ἀδικίαν.—justum modum, 'due bounds, ordinary limits.' The epithet does not mean 'just,' but 'regular,' and on the same principle we have 'injusto sub fasce,' Georg. iii. 347 ; 'iniquo pondere rastro,' ibid. i. 164 ; Cic. de Div. i. § xvii. 33 : 'negaverunt justum comitiorum rogatorem fuisse.'

305. Thestiaden ;] Meleager, son of Thestius, whose life depended on the preservation of a certain fatal faggot. When this was consumed by his mother Althaea he forthwith died. See Met. viii. 260, seqq.—absentibus. So Propert. iv. (iii.) 22. 31 :—

'Nec cuiquam absentes arserunt in Exitium nato matre movente suo.'

—Phoebes ara, the altar of Diana, which had been neglected by Oeneus, king of Aetolia, and to punish whom the Calydonian boar was sent by her to ravage the country.

308. Virgo est.] 'Cui mitior animus convenit.' Gierig.—bis, i. e. in the case of Agamemnon as well as of Oeneus.

309. Dionem] See on ii. 461. Cicero (De Nat. Deor. iii. 23. 59) enumerates several Venuses, 'tertia Jove nata et Diona, quae nupsit Vulcano.'

312. Manifesta doloris?] This construction is common in the sense 'convicted of,' &c., but here it bears the very different meaning 'giving proof of.'—notae, 'disgrace.' Sup. iv. 915. Propert. i. 18. 8: 'nunc in amore tuo cogor habere notam.' Some have explained it, 'bearing evidences of the author,' or, as it were, 'of my coinage.'

318. fila croci.] The same as 'spica Cilissa,' i. 76, where see the note.

321. Florebant] See supra 266.

324. frondes] If the leaves of any plant are destroyed or injured the fruit will dwindle and the plant itself will pine away. Hence great anxiety was expressed for the 'pampinus' or vine-leaf, as Georg. ii. 333: 'nec metuit surgentes pampinus austros.'

332. liberior jocus.] Supra iv. 946. The Floralia were kept with considerable licentiousness, as we know from Martial, i. 1:—

‘Nosses jocosae dulce cum sacrum Florae,
 Festosque lusus, et licentiam vulgi,
 Cur in theatrum, Cato severe, venisti?
 An ideo tantum veneras, ut exires?’

Ibid. i. 36. 8:—

‘Quis Floralia vestit, et stolatum
 Permittit meretricibus pudorem?’

The mimae, or female dancers of loose character, appeared in the theatres with the most profligate indecency. Our old English festival of May-day, now nearly extinct, was simply a perpetuation of the Floralia. The ‘lascivia major’ of the former may be inferred from passages such as that of Milton, ‘as he met her once a-Maying.’

334. munera] i. e. ‘flores.’ See sup. 261.

335. sutilibus coronis.] These are the ‘nexae philyra coronae’ of Horace, Od. i. 38. 2. Martial v. 64. 4: ‘lassenturque rosis tempora sutilibus.’ Ibid. ix. 91. 6: ‘frontem, sutilibus ruber coronis,’ and 93, 5: ‘sutilus aptetur decies rosa crinibus.’ Becker, Gallus, p. 496—8 (Eng. Transl. ed. 2), gives an elaborate account of the convivial chaplets of the Romans. Those called sutiles were made by stitching roses to a strip of bark from the evergreen shrub philyra (inf. 337). It was believed that a cooling or narcotic effect was produced on the heated brow of the hard drinker by these crowns. Plutarch, Symposiac. iii. Quaest. i: αἱ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἀπόρροιαὶ πρὸς τοῦτο θαυμασίως βοηθοῦσι, καὶ ἀποτεριχίζουσι τὴν κεφαλὴν ἀπὸ τῆς μέθης ὡς ἀκρόπολιν. Hence perhaps Hor. Od. i. 7. 22: ‘uda Lyaco Tempora populea fertur vinxisse corona.’

336. injecta rosa.] The magnificent and highly-polished tables, orbēs citrei, were covered with roses, or perhaps rose-leaves showered from above. Propert. v. (iv.) 8. 40: ‘et facilis spargi munda sine arte rosa,’ where other instances are given of the use of this word in the singular, i. e. generically. The poet means to express the laxities that prevailed in mixed banquets of both sexes. Hence flowers are ‘apta deliciis munera,’ ver. 334.

338. imprudens] Unconscious of the exposure he is making of himself.—arte meri means dancing, which the Romans considered degrading except for professional persons.

343. Acheloë.] Compare Georg. i. 9: ‘poculaque inventis Acheloia miscuit uvis.’ The use of this word for ‘water’ generally,—and indeed it contains the same root as aqua,—is first found in Eurip. Bacch. 625.

- Bacchus amat flores : Baccho placuisse coronam, 345
 Ex Ariadnaeo sidere nosse potes.

 Illa cothurnatas inter habenda deas.
 Turba quidem cur hos celebret meretricia ludos,
 Non ex difficili causa petita subest. 350
 Non est de tetricis, non est de magna professis :
 Vult sua plebeio sacra patere choro ;
 Et monet aetatis specie, dum floreat, uti,
 Contemni spinam, cum cecidere rosae.
 Cur tamen, ut dantur vestes Cerealibus albae, 355
 Sic est haec cultu versicolore decens ?
 An quia maturis albescit messis aristis,
 Et color et species floribus omnis inest ?
 Annuit ; et motis flores cecidere capillis,
 Accidere in mensas ut rosa missa solet. 360
 Lumina restabant, quorum me causa latebat,
 Cum sic errores abstulit illa meos :
 Vel quia purpureis collucent floribus agri,
 Lumina sunt nostros visa decere dies ;
 Vel quia nec flos est hebeti, nec flamma, colore, 365
 Atque oculos in se splendor uterque trahit ;

348. cothurnatas.] The dignity and gravity of tragedy is here contrasted with the levity of pantomimic acting.

351. tetricis.] 'Severe, stern moralists.'—patere. The emphasis is on this word rather than plebeio choro. She wishes that her festival should be unlike mysteries, open and accessible, even to the lowest. Gierig understands chorus as 'ille ipse meretricum saltantium et discurrentium coetus.'

354. Contemni] 'She reminds us that no one cares for the person when its beauty has fled.'

356. versicolore] 'Tali amictu uti mulieribus Romanis interdictum erat lege Oppia. Liv. 34. 1.' Gierig. Supra 217: 'pictis incinctae vestibus Horae.' On the white garments used at the Cerealia, see iv. 619.

360. ut rosa missa] See supra 336. But perhaps the allusion is rather to rose-leaves falling from the faded garlands of banqueters. Propert. iii. 25. 37: 'cum tua praependent deimissae in pocula sertae.'

361. Lumina] Torches, perhaps carried in procession as in the Cerealia, iv. 494. 'The only other mention of this custom that we meet with is in Dion Cassius, lviii. 19, where however it is only said that light was given to those who were going out of the theatre at the Floralia. But this infers that it was night (?), so that the interior of the theatre must have been lighted: comp. ver. 367.' Keightley. The inference seems plausible, but cannot be called certain. The poet may mean nothing more than that torches are symbolical of night. It is a grave question whether the Roman theatre was ever used but for performances under the light of the sun.—collucent. Cf. Propert. i. 2, 13.

371. clauduntur rete] This alludes to the baiting of beasts in the Amphitheatre, usually wild and fierce ones, and in prodigious variety, but, in this exceptional instance, of a smaller and tamer kind. Hares, as we know from Martial's book De Spectaculis, were often exhibited to be caught without injury by lions. Gierig quotes ibid. viii. 67: 'Et Floralicias lasset arena feras.'—rete is an unusual ablative: Keightley thinks from retis; but there is a tendency in many ablatives to vary irregularly between e and i. See on iii. 564.

373. cessisse,] 'in dominium venisse.'

376. Mansit odor,] So Hippolytus perceives the divine presence of Diana by a fragrant smell, Hippol. 1391; and Prometheus the approach of the Ocean Nymphs by the same token, P. V. 115. It is very appropriately said of the goddess of flowers.

378. donis tuis.] Probably he means generally grace and elegance, vigour of expression, &c.

379. Nocte minus quarta] i.e. the third of the month; the day immediately succeeding it being, as it were, the full fourth. Thus inf. 600 one night is said, on the 13th, to remain before the 15th.

383. Phillyrides] Chiron, son of the nymph Philyra, by Saturn in the shape of a horse, Virg. Georg. iii. 92. He educated Achilles, and taught him to play the lute. See Juven. vii. 210:

'—Metuens virgae jam grandis Achilles

Cantabat patriis in montibus: et cui non tunc

Eliceret risum citharoedi cauda magistri?'

He was celebrated by many writers for his justice. Gierig refers to Eurip. Iph. Aul. 926, where Achilles says:—

- Ille manus, olim missuras Hectora leto, 385

According to Aelian, Var. Hist. ix. 16, there was an Italian representative of the Centaur race, which he rightly refers to an ancient tradition of the first rider, called Mares (Μάρης).

389. duo fata] 'duo viri urbi Trojanae fatales. Hercules, Laomedontis perfidiam ulturus, Ilium expugnavit.' Gierig.

396. Vellus,] This passage, like ii. 340, shows that the word is not restricted to 'a fleece,' but may be used for tergus or pellis. If however Varro is right in his ingenious derivation a vellendo, L. L. v. § 54, i. e. from plucking off the wool before shears were invented, the former must be the primary sense.—

seta is properly hair, as that of goats, distinct from wool. See Georg. iii. 312. It is more properly spelt saeta, for it is only a form of χαίτη, the aspirate being represented by s.

401. Pagasaeis] 'Thessalian,' from the port Pagasae (i. 491). That country was far-famed for its potent herbs, used both in medicine and the magic arts. Hence, as it would seem, the plant called Centaureum (Lucret. iv. 124. Georg. iv. 274) took its name. The English Flora has also its 'centaury' (Erythraea centaurium), which the old herbalists tell us is 'a wonderful good help against the biting of an adder,' and 'singular both for green and fresh wounds.' But it cannot be the classical plant, which Virgil calls 'graveolens.'

 'Effingo manus,' Her. xx. 134. It is said of one who straightens and arranges the helpless limbs of the sick or dying.—doctor, &c. Chiron had taught his pupil the art of healing, and now received the benefit of it himself.

416. tertia] The third inclusive after the 3rd of the month, of which the poet has been writing, i. e. the 5th.

426. Compositi] See on iii. 545.

428. partem] The other part of the same ceremony, as it may be called, viz. the Parentalia, was celebrated in February, ii. 533, seqq.

431. timidus deorum] δεισιδαίμων, full of superstitious awe.—vincula, 'shoes,' as supra ii. 324. See Virg. Aen. iv. 518; Met. vii. 182.

- Signaque dat, digitis medio cum pollice junctis, Occurrat tacito ne levis umbra sibi ;
 Cumque manus puras fontana perluit unda, 435
 Vertitur et nigras accipit ore fabas,
 Aversusque jacet ; sed dum jacet, Haec ego mitto ;
 His, inquit, redimo meque meosque fabis.
 Hoc novies dicit, nec respicit. Umbra putatur
 Colligere, et nullo terga vidente sequi. 440
 Rursus aquam tangit, Temesaeaque concrepat aera,
 Et rogat, ut tectis exeat umbra suis.
 Cum dixit novies, Manes exite paterni !

 Dicta sit unde dies, quae nominis exstet origo, 445
 Me fugit. Ex aliquo est invenienda deo.
 Pleiade nate, mone, virga venerande potenti :
 Saepe tibi Stygii regia visa Jovis.

433. Signa] i. e. 'praesentiae suae.' The natural dread of darkness is in great measure owing to the profound silence which usually accompanies it. Hence timid people purposely make some noise when they fear ghosts, as by whistling, singing, &c. In this case, the person snaps his fingers, lest the ghost should steal on him tacito, walking barefoot and noiselessly. The construction is a little perplexed : digitis junctis, medio scilicet cum pollice.

436. ore] Compare ii. 576 : 'Et septem nigras versat in ore fabas.' The use of beans in this singular ceremony may perhaps be explained by the remark on iv. 725. We may thus understand ver. 438. Festus however, quoted by Gierig, after stating that the bean was used at the Lemuria and Parentalia, adds, 'in flore ejus luctus literae apparere videntur.' The bean-flower is said to be unique in having perfectly black 'signs of woe.'

437. Aversus] 'With face turned away from the direction in which they are thrown.' In other words, he tosses them behind him without daring to look back at the spirit which was supposed to collect them.

Virg. Ecl. viii. 102 : 'transque caput jace, ne respexeris.' Aesch. Cho. 91 : δικοῦσα τεῦχος ἀστροφῶσιν ὄμμασιν. Theocr. xxiv. 91 : ἄψ δὲ νέεσθαι ἀστρεπτος. Oed. Col. 490 : ἔπειτ' ἀφέρπειν ἀστροφος. Infra vi. 164.

439. novies] There were therefore nine beans (seven in ii. 576), which were thrown behind one after the other, and at each cast the formula was repeated. Hence the ghost is said terga sequi, not merely a tergo apparere. Keightley remarks that uneven numbers were thought to have great efficacy, quoting Met. xiii. 952 : 'Et purgante nefas novies mihi carmine dicto.'

441. Temesaea aera,] Copper from Temesa, among the Bruttii at the foot of Italy. Od. i. 183 : πλέων ἐπὶ οἴνοπι πόντου ἐπ' ἄλλοθρόους ἀνθρώπους, Ἐς Τεμέσην μετὰ χαλκόν. This use of tinkling metal in magic rites is well known. It was preserved throughout the middle ages in the belief that bells would scare away evil spirits.

447. virga — regia Jovis.] See Hor. Od. i. 10. 17—20, and i. 24. 17.

451. umbras,] There is a common confusion, at least in terms, as observed on Propert. v. 11. 1, between the bodily remains and the 'Manes' or spirit, when mention is made of the grave.—male veloci, 'who leaped the wall to his own destruction,' iv. 843.

453. Acca] See iii. 55; iv. 854.

456. Ut erat,] 'sine apparatu,' Gierig. In this case we may compare the Greek phrase ὡς εἶχε. But he may also mean ut erat illis non nisi durus torus.

459. pars altera voti] 'an equal object of your hopes and cares with Romulus.—sim qualis, &c. Many take the latter qualis to be an exclamation. Probably both are relatives: ἴδεσθε οἷος πεφυκῶς οἷος εἶμι. The indicative eram is thus poetically used for fuero.

470. sanguinolentus] A violent death by the sword was regarded as a misfortune even to the spirit in the nether world, as Gierig shows from Servius. A natural or bloodless death was mors sicca, Juven. x. 113.

471. pietas aequalis] 'His affection for me was as great as mine for him.' See on iv. 849.

473. vestra alimenta] This is used as the Greeks would have used ὑμετέραν τροφήν, sc. the nourishment given, not that received. And such appears to be the primary sense. See Varronianus, p. 406.

480. positis] See iii. 545.

481. in lenem] Merkel edits in levem from a few MSS. The derivation from Remus does not appear probable, though l and r are frequently interchanged, as Lara and Lala ii. 600. Lemures is more likely a Pelasgic word, connected with λαμυρός, 'gaping,' 'gluttonous;' a view which bears out Dr. Donaldson's suggestion (Varronianus, p. 151) that Larva is a feminine form of Lar, and means 'the wide-mouthed figure.' He compares larvus, λαμία, λάμος, λάουγξ, λαίτμα. In Virg. Aen. ix. 334 we have the Rutulian names 'Lamyrumque Lamumque' combined. But lama, 'a pond,' in Hor. Epist. i. 13. 10, has the first syllable long. The notion of a ghost being wide-mouthed and devouring is clearly seen in our word goblin, connected with gobble. We may add that Lemuria certainly came from Lemures, not conversely, as the poet intimates, 483.

485. illis diebus,] During the Lemuria. The same customs of closing the temples and avoiding marriage prevailed during the Feralia, ii. 557. 563. See supra 428.

490.] Plutarch inquires (Quaest. R. § 86) 'why men do not marry in May.' Among several conjectures, he gives one which is at least as plausible as the rest, that Maius being called from old men, and Junius from young ones, the matrimonial omen of the latter is more propitious! It is said that this superstition still exists.

492. nulla continuata die.] Though there are three days of the Lemuria, no two of them are kept consecutively. The days marked in the old Calendars are the 7th, 5th, and 3rd of the Ides. 'If,' the poet proceeds to say, 'you look for Orion on the middle of these three days, you will not find it, for it set on the sixth of the Ides.' The ingenuity shown in expressing these difficult dates should not be overlooked.—Quorum refers to festa in v. 491.

504. dissimulant deos.] i. e. 'se esse,' as simularat anum, iv. 517.

508. quassas faces.] These words require some explanation. Faces is for taedae, which it has been shown on ii. 558 meant pieces of split pine-wood. Quatere facem was said of those who, in carrying these bits of wood for torches, or rather bundles of them tied together, occasionally knocked off the accumulated carbon to renew the blaze. Hence Propert. i. 3. 10: 'Et quaterent sera nocte facem pueri;' and iv. (iii.) 16. 16: 'ipse Amor accensas percutit ante faces.' Compare Ovid, Amor. i. 2. 12. Quassae faces are therefore the stumps of burnt-out links reserved for fire-wood. See supra iv. 167.

509. calices:] 'pipkins.' Keightley. This is a rare sense; but Varro perhaps recognises it, L. L. v. § 127: 'Culix a caldo, quod in eo calda puls apponebatur et caldum eo bibebant.'—minor inde, i. e. 'ex iis,' a remarkable usage.—testu. See on ii. 645.

511. Dum mora est,] 'dum coquitur cibus.'

514. Juppiter.] This was, of course, a lapsus linguae, as is clear from 504.

517. diffuderat] This word is technically applied to what we should call 'bottling wine,' i. e. transferring it from the dolium to the amphora or cadus. Hence generally 'to store up,' as Hor. Epist. i. 3. 8: 'Bella quis et paces longum diffundit in aevum?'—puer. There is reason to believe that the Romans exaggerated the age of wine as greatly as is now done.—fumoso cado. The jars were set near the fire, perhaps actually in the chimney, to mellow and ripen the wine: 'amphorae fumum bibere institutae Consule Tullo,' Hor. Od. iii. 8. 11. This is still done in some places where wine is made. The casks are subjected to an artificial heat, and this is called 'stoving wine.' The Romans seem to have regarded the expedient as a fraud. Martial, x. 36. 1:—

'Improba Massiliae quicquid fumaria cogunt, Accipit aetatem quisquis ab igne cadus.'

519. lino celantibus] The mattresses (tori) were of linen stuffed with some kind of grass or soft rush. What the Romans meant precisely by ulva (i. 200) requires investigation. The word is probably only a dialectic variety of ὕλη and silva. The stuffing was called tomentum, which, as the first syllable is long, does not come from τέμνω, but seems to be for toromentum. Martial, xiv. 160: 'Tomentum concisa palus Circense vocatur.' The mattresses were piled one upon another so as to be alti. It is recorded of Augustus, Suet. Oct. § lxxiii.: 'ne toro quidem cubuisse aiunt, nisi humili et modice instrato.' The frame of the bed was lectus.

522. terra rubens] The bowl (iv. 779) was of red earthenware, or terra cotta, the cups of wood. Met. viii. 668:

—'Post haec caelatus eadem
Sistitur argilla crater, fabricataque fago Pocula.'

535. Uriona:] From οὐρον. Horace and others represent Orion as having offered violence to Diana while hunting:

Ovid's account is, that to punish his boast of being able to overcome every animal, the small but venomous scorpion was sent, by which he was stung in attempting to divert it from Latona the mother of his patroness. The genuine Italian name for Orion was Jugula. Varro, L. L. vii. § 50.

542. ferre deae.] i. e. 'inferre.'

544. Addidit] i. e. 'et scorpionum et Oriona.' Meriti praemia refers only to Orion, who had rendered her assistance.

545. mundo Cedere] 'To leave the sky.' The same compliment, a foolish one from its extravagance, had been paid to Augustus, iv. 673. —coarctat, 'contracts,' 'shortens.' Propert. iv. 20. 12: 'Phoebe, moraturae contrahelucis iter.'

551. Ultor] A temple to Mars Ultor was dedicated by Augustus in the forum called by his name, A. U. C.

752. Suet. Oct. § 29. He had vowed it just before the battle of Philippi. See inf. 569. But the punishment of the rebel Parthians and the vengeance taken for the murder of Julius Caesar were equally commemorated by this event. In the latter capacity Augustus himself was 'patiens vocari Caesaris ultor,' Hor. Od. i. 2. 44. Suet. Oct. § x.: 'Omnium bellorum initium et causam hinc sumpsit, nihil convenientius ducens quam necem avunculi vindicare, tuerique acta.'

555. tropaeis:] 'Those gained by Mars in the giant-war. Perhaps there was a representation of this on the pediment of the temple.' Keightley.—hinc bella movere. The temple of Mars was expressly ordered to be used by the senate in consulting about war. Suet. Oct. § 29.

557, 558. Eoo — occiduo] The Germans and the Parthians. See inf. 580.

559. Perspicit] 'Takes a survey of,' as if examining the new temple when completed, as did the censor, who was said probare (vi. 212). Many good MSS. give prospicit.—summa tenere. Near the top of the pediment it was usual to place a double figure. Propert. iii. 23. 11 : 'et duo solis erant supra fastigia currus.'

561. in foribus] It is not clear whether he speaks of real arms suspended near the entrance of the temple, which was a common custom, and which Keightley believes to be alluded to, or whether they were only sculptured on the doors, as described in Propert. iii. 23. 13; Virg. Georg. iii. 26, seqq. In either case they were diversae figurae, according to the nations represented.

564. avos.] The ancestry of Augustus are similarly portrayed on Virgil's imaginary temple, Georg. iii. 35, though perhaps he had this in view.

565. Iliaden] Romulus. See iv.

23.—ducis arma. The spolia opima taken from Acron. Livy i. 10; Propert. v. 10. 15.—acta subesse. The tituli or inscriptions on the base of the statues chronologically arranged (dispositis).

567. praetextum] As it were 'fringed' or 'bordered' with the name of the founder, and the circumstances of the dedication, round the frieze of the temple. The addition of the word 'templum' in this verse seems to show that the preceding verses refer generally to the statues of illustrious Romans in the Forum Augustum. See Sueton. Oct. § 31 : 'statuas omnium triumphali effigie in utraque Fori sui porticu dedicavit.'

569. pia arma.] To avenge the murder of Caesar, at the battle of Philippi, in which Brutus and Cassius the conspirators were routed.—Princeps. Augustus (or rather Octavian, for the title of Augustus followed that of Princeps) took this name in his sixth consulship, A.U.C. 726. Hor. Od. i. 2. 50 : 'hic ames dici pater atque princeps.'

571. milite justo.] 'The regular troops,' i. e. those which had the

573. Vestae sacerdos] Julius Caesar as Pontifex. See iii. 699.

575. scelerato] Because shed in civil war. Hence 'Mars impius.' Georg. i. 511.

580. Parthi—manu.] The standards taken from Crassus, and recovered by Augustus in 734. Both the father and the younger son, P. Crassus, fell in this unfortunate expedition, B.C. 53. See inf. vi. 465; Cic. de Div. ii. 9. 22; and the fine elegy of Propertius, iv. (iii.) 4. It was in this year (734) that Horace wrote Epist. i. 12; and he alludes to the event in ver. 27: 'jus imperiumque Phraates Caesaris accepit genibus minor.' The recovered standards were deposited in the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus by Augustus, who prided himself on the success of the expedition.

Hor. Od. iv. 15. 6 :—

'Et signa nostro restituit Jovi
 Derepta Parthorum superbis
 Postibus.'

See Sueton. Oct. § xxi. Gierig adds: 'Amplificatur Augusti honor. Quo difficilior aditu illa gens, quo ferocior rebus suis secundis, quo tristior ignominia Romanis inde illata, eo major Augusti gloria receptis signis.' The circumfusa flumina are in fact wholly imaginary. The Tigris and the Euphrates were the only rivers of importance which had to be crossed. But the geography of the Parthian territory was but little known.

591. mitti post terga] This custom was perhaps not peculiar to the Parthians; for we find on the Assyrian marbles a horseman with his face turned backwards in flight, and in the act of discharging an arrow; Layard, Nineveh, p. 221. Propert. iii. 1. 13 :—

Virg. Aen. xi. 654: ‘spicula con-

593. porrigis] This word is used to express the humility with which the thing demanded is tendered to the conqueror. Gierig well compares i. 646: ‘passos Germania crines porrigit.’ Similarly Trist. ii.
l. 227: ‘nunc porrigit arcus Par-thus eques.’

595. bis ulto] ‘Qui bis ultus est cives Romanos,’ sc. ‘Philippis et apud Parthos.’ Nomen, i. e. ‘Martis Ultoris.’ — meritus voti. There is some confusion in the ideas of ‘earning’ and ‘paying.’ Gierig explains, ‘Augustus votis suis honorem meritus solvit debita,’ reading votis with one or two inferior MSS.
Properly not the vow, but he who makes it, is said solvere debita, or meritum voti honorem. The meaning is, ‘the well-deserved honour of the vow pays, by its fulfilment, what was due to Mars.’ Perhaps,

however, voti debita should be taken together.

598. scena] The Cerealia and Megalesia terminated with exhibitions at both the circus and the theatre. The latter were omitted on this festival, as being too trivial for the occasion. The ‘Tabula Maffiana’ of Merkel has ‘Lud.
Mart. in circ.’ marked against the 12th of May.

601. aestas,] By this term the poet means especially ‘the sailing season,’ ἄπav, which commenced with the rising, and ended with the setting of the Pleiades or Vergiliae, in the beginning of November.
Propert. i. 8. 10: ‘et sit iners
tardis navita Vergiliis.’

603. prior Idibus, &c.] ‘Pridie Idus Tauri frons apparet.’ The beautiful description which follows, and which is almost identical with that given by Lucian in Dial. Deor.
and Moschus, Id. ii. 126, must have been derived from some celebrated statue or picture, or perhaps the traditional account of one. Compare also Met. ii. 833, seq.

Talia fatidici dieta fuisse senis:

610. sic fueras aspicienda] 'This was the posture you should have assumed at first if you had wished to captivate Jove.' Gierig has accipienda, sc. tergo Jovis.

619. Phariam juvencam,] Io, whom many regarded as an Egyptian deity, identical with Isis, as Propert. iii. 25. 3. The pentameter is repeated from Her. xiv. 86.

621. Tum quoque] 'Idibus Maiis, sacrificio ante peracto, Pontifices, Vestales, Praetores, alique cives, simulacra ad humanae formae similitudinem facta, numero triginta, de ponte sublicio in Tiberim mittebant.' Gierig. See on iii. 791. There can be little doubt that this singular custom, which was kept up pro forma long after its real meaning had been lost, originated in that craving after vicarious human sacrifice which seems to be an instinct in man. See on iv. 725.—roboreo ponte, the ancient wooden bridge called sublicius, from being 'tied' together with timbers. Hence, according to Varro, L. L. v. § 83, the title of 'pontifex,' or 'bridge-maker,' was derived: 'Nam ab his Sublicius est factus primum, ut restitutus saepe, quom in eo sacra et uls et cis Tiberim non mediocri ritu fiant.' (By sacra Varro probably means this very ceremony. Cf. lib. vii. § 44.) But Dr. Donaldson (Varron. p. 419) connects it with pondus and pendeo, 'the priest who settles the atonement for a specific fault by the imposition of a fine.'

623. post decies senos] One opinion, which the poet thinks untenable, because it implies unnatural conduct in the ancient Italians, was that men who were past sixty years used to be made away with by drowning. The Sardinians, Aelian tells us, Var. Hist. iv. 1, dispatched their old men; it is therefore possible that this barbarous custom was carried by the early settlers into Italy.

627. libata] See on ii. 653.

629. Tiryntius] i. 542, seqq.—
Leucadio modo. See Her. xv. 172. The 'lover's leap' at the promontory of Leucas, above Corcyra, was well known. Whether as a cure for love, or as a punishment for crimes, is uncertain; but it was an ancient custom to precipitate persons from that rock; and when the proceeding had lost something of its primitive rigour, and passed into a ceremony, feathers were tied to break the fall. Hence Ovid's Sappho exclaims, in that beautiful passage, Heroid. xv. 179:—

'Tu quoque, mollis Amor, pennas suppose cadenti,
 Ne sim Leucadiae mortua crimen aquae.'

Strabo, x. p. 452, § 9: 'It was an established usage with the Leucadians to hurl some criminal from the rock every year at the feast of Apollo, for the sake of averting calamity, all sorts of feathers and (living) birds being fastened to him to lighten the leap by their buoyancy; while many were ready to receive him below in little boats, ranged in a circle, and convey him when picked up safe out of the boundaries.'

634. Pontibus] The 'pontes' were raised galleries, perhaps temporary, by which the voters were admitted into the Septa (i. 53), at the comitia centuriata. To keep them clear, and to prevent those who had no votes from thronging them, they used to call out in joke, 'Throw down the old men.' For those above sixty are said to have been released from political duties. This is given on the authority of Nonius and Festus, quoted by Gierig.

637. arundiferum caput] Thus Virgil represents Father Tiber, Aen. vii. 34: 'crines umbrosa tegebat arundo.' Thus also in Lycidas Milton gives the Cam a bonnet of sedge.

640. pascebat] Cf. i. 381. AEn. viii. 360.

642. despiciendus] Here there is a play between the senses of despicere 'to despise,' and 'to look down at,' i. e. 'prono capite contemplari.' See on iii. 113.

660. ut] Merkel reads hactenus, et, &c., with a period at antra. The authority of the MSS. is about equal for et and ut; but hactenus generally stands alone and disconnected with what follows.

664. Pleïas una] una ex Pleiadibus. See sup. 87. Gierig thinks, and with much probability, that Ovid had in view the well-known ode of Horace, i. 10, in the following address to Mercury. The temple here spoken of was dedicated A.U.C. 258, by M. Laetorius, the centurion. See Livy ii. 27. Mercury was worshipped by the guild or sodality of merchants at Rome as the patron of gain, either honestly or dishonestly obtained. See supra 104. He was styled ἐμπολαῖος by the Greeks, and facetiously Ἐρμῆς παλιγκάπηλος, Arist. Plut. 1156.

Te, quicumque suas profitentur vendere merces,

674. numen habet.] The Romans believed that a divinity resided in certain waters, especially those of a medicinal kind. Hence Propert. iv. (iii.) 18. 8: 'quis deus in vestra constitit hostis aqua?' So the spa called Juturna in the Forum (ii. 585), was presided over by a nymph, and was frequented by many sick people, 'propter id nomen,' says Varro, L. L. v. § 71. He adds, ibid. that there was a 'Lympha Commotia, a commotu, quia ibi insula in aqua commovetur.' There appears to be no mention made of Mercury's well in other writers. This need not excite our surprise; for it does not seem to have been a spa, but merely used for lustral water on a particular occasion.

675. incinctus] Gierig takes this for cinctus; and Keightley compares 'incinctos Lares,' ii. 634. Perhaps it means 'ungirt,' with the tunic allowed to fall low, for so the 'in-stiores,' or pedlar-merchants dressed, as we know from Propert. v. (iv.) 2. 38: 'mundus demissis institor in tunicis.' As in the middle ages, the Roman merchants had a distinctive dress, and are said to have carried a purse at their girdle.

678. dominos novos.] All goods and commodities which were about to change hands were sprinkled with water from an aspersorium of bay-leaves. See iv. 736.

687. pateant] 'Aditus mihi detur ad nova perjuria.' Gierig. The petition does not convey a favourable impression of the honesty of Roman tradesmen. Precisely similar is the request of the slave in Horace. Epist. i. 16. 60:

—'pulchra Laverna
Da mihi fallere, da justo sanctoque videri,
Noctem peccatis et fraudibus objice
nubem.'

Talia Mercurius poscentes ridet ab alto,
Se memor Ortygias surripuisse boves.

693. tanto meliora] 'Comparat poeta nunc sequentia cum precibus mercatorum, quae antecedunt.' Gierig. The poet still addresses Mercury, desiring to know not only when the sun enters Gemini, viz. on the 20th, or twelve days inclusive from the end of the month, but also the origin of the constellation.

700.] On the story here given see Pind. Nem. x. 103, seqq.; Theocr. Id. xxii. Apollodor. iii. 10. 3. Propert. i. 2. 15:—

720. sollicitae rati.] This exactly corresponds to our expression, 'a ship in distress.' See Hor. Od. i. 12. 27. Not only the constellation, but an electric light, which often settles on the masts and yard-arms of ships in the Mediterranean, was considered as Castor and Pollux, the harbingers of calm.

721. Ad Janum redeat.] See on i. 322. But it appears from one of the old Calendars (Merkel, p. clviii.) that they were distinct festivals, this latter being in honour of Vedjovis (iii. 430).

727. Quattuor notis] The letters Q. R. C. F., which would bear two interpretations, quando rex comitiavit fas, and quando rex comitio fugit. The Rex is of course the 'Rex sacrificulus' (ii. 21) in either case. But it appears from a passage of Plutarch, Quaest. R. § 63, that the flight of Tarquin was, as it were, acted by the Rex after performing a sacrifice on this day:—ἔστι γούνη τις ἐν ἀγορᾷ θυσία πρὸς τῷ λεγομένῳ Κομητίῳ (comitio) πάτριος, ἣν θύσας ὁ βασιλεὺς κατὰ τάχος ἄπεισι φεύγων ἐξ ἀγορᾶς. Varro, L. L. vi. § 31, explains the above letters in the former way, as denoting a half-holiday, after the Rex had left the Comitium. In the 'Tabula Maffeana' the 24th of May is marked by these letters, precisely as Ovid describes.

1—100.] ‘Fere ut iv. init. drama fecit e quaestione grammatica. Namque poetam in nemore meditantem tres deae adeunt, e quibus Juno suam causam agit, 21—64. Hebe alteram sententiam patrociniis suo defendit, 65—83. Concordia tertiam, 91—96. Quarum reverentia tactus poeta nihil decernit, 97—100.’ Gierig. Of these opinions Merkel (p. lxxxii.) considers that only those relating to Hebe and Concord are original on the part of the poet, the others (21—64, and 83—88) being borrowed respectively from Varro and Fulvius Nobilior. The real meaning of the name Juno is as uncertain to modern etymologists as it was to the Romans in Ovid’s time. Varro, L. L. vi. § 33, gives his opinion that it was ‘a junioribus dictus Junius.’ —ipse leges. ‘You shall select what you think is most probable when the various causes alleged have been laid before you.’

6. Impetus hic] This inspiration, or emotion, contains in itself ‘divinae particulam aurae.’ Such was the doctrine of Pythagoras and the Stoics, as applied by Virgil to the instinct of birds, Georg. i. 415, and to bees, ibid. iv. 220, while the Epicureans denied the converse of the gods with men, and what are called ‘particular providences,’ and held that the universe was maintained by general laws. To this the poet alludes in v. 3—4.

8. Vel—vel] ‘Either for the one cause, or the other, or both together.’ Aut—aut would have meant one exclusive of the other.

10. obstreperere] is properly to ‘outbawl’ by a greater noise, as Propert. i. 16. 46, but is commonly used of the murmur of trees, with that of water, birds, &c. The passive is rather improperly used; but Cicero had said ‘res obstrepi clamore videntur,’ ‘to be put down by clamour,’ καταθορυβεῖσθαι.—secretus, i. e. ‘qui secretus esset nisi,’ &c.

Ecce deas vidi: non quas praeceptor arandi

 Nec quas Priamides in aquosae vallibus Idae 15

 A patre dicta meo quondam Saturnia Roma est;
 Haec illi a caelo proxima terra fuit.
 Si torus in pretio est, dicor matrona Tonantis, Junctaque Tarpeio sunt mea templa Jovi.

14. Viderat.] See Hesiod, Theogn. 22, where he represents the Muses to have visited him as he tended sheep under Helicon. Gierig compares A. A. i. 27:—

‘Nec mihi sunt visac Clio Cliusque sorores
 Servanti pecudes vallibus, Ascra, tuis.’

18. quae stat] Keightley doubts whether the temple of Juno Moneta (i. 637) is meant, or the triple Capitoline temple of Jupiter, Juno, and Minerva. The latter seems to be indicated by vv. 34. 52. 74.

19. Horrueram] Compare i. 90, and iii. 331.

25. vulgū errore] Not any particular opinion wrongly held by ordinary people, but generally, ‘want of information on the subject.’

30. sors] ‘Quod sorte datur; tum omnino quod alicui contingit.’

Gierig, who remarks that Homer and Hesiod make Vesta the first-born of Saturn. The former, however, in fact agrees with Ovid, II. iv. 59, the Homeric Hymn to Venus (22) being of little authority.

31. Saturnia] Virgil, Aen. viii, 355—358, represents Evander as showing Aeneas two ruined towns, one on the Janiculum, and therefore across the Tiber, the other called Saturnia, on the hill Saturnius or Capitolium. Varro perhaps follows the same tradition, L. L. v. § 42: ‘hunc antea montem Saturnium appellatum prodiderunt, et ab eo late Saturniam terram, ut etiam Ennius appellat. Antiquum oppidum in hoc fuisse Saturnia scribitur.’—a caelo proxima, ‘next after heaven,’ i. e. the first he came to after being expelled: ‘Primus ab aethereo venit Saturnus Olympo,’ Aen. viii. 319. Supra i. 233—236.

 Quos ego Romanis succubuisse tuli. 50
 Sed neque poeniteat, nec gens mihi carior ulla est;
 Hic colar, hic teneam cum Jove templa meo.

35. pellex] Juno uses the term in jealousy, as Maia was said 'concupuisse Jovi,' v. 86.

37. Regina] This was one of her regular titles, like Lucina, Moneta, Sospita. See Varro, L. L. v. § 67. Livy v. 21. 23. Aen. i. 46.

40. a nullo mense] 'Ovidius consilii sui oblitus parum accurate scripsit. Juno enim non a mense nomen habere, sed mensi nomen dedisse vult.' Gierig. On the name Lucina see ii. 449. Cic. de Nat. Deor. ii. 27. 68: 'Luna a lucendo nominata; eadem est enim Lucina. Itaque, ut apud Graecos Dianam eamque Luciferam, sic apud nostros Junonem Lucinam in pariendo invocant.'

41. Tum me, &c.] 'Then, indeed, I might with reason regret that I remitted my anger against the Trojans, and that too with such good faith, that Rome has been allowed to attain her present greatness.' Compare Hor. Od. iii. 3. 30: 'protinus et graves iras, et invisum nepotem—Marti redonabo.' There can be no doubt that in this passage

Ovid had before his eyes the opening of the Aeneid, especially vv. 16, 17, 27, 28.

45. foveo] 'Præsenti tempore utitur, quia anno v.c. 710 ac deinde a. 726 coloniae denuo Carthaginem deductae sunt, Junonis sine dubio auspiciis.' Merkel, p. lxxxii.

48. supposuisse] 'Subjecisse potestati Romanorum.' Gierig. So i. 306: 'aetheraque ingenio supposuere suo.'

49.] The worship of Juno was introduced at Rome by Titus Tatius (Varro, L. L. v. § 74). Dionysius, ii. 50 (quoted by Gierig), mentions a Juno Quiritia (Κουριτία), or Curitis, as honoured in each curia after the Sabine institution. The Falisci brought the same Pelasgic cultus from Argos (iv. 73). These two nations she 'allowed to succumb so the Romans.'

51. Sed neque poeniteat,] The construction seems changed from ver. 41. The verb is here optative; in the other it was conditional. It is the difference between τότ' ἂν μεταμέλοι and ἀλλὰ μὴ μεταμέλοι.

Ipse mihi Mavors, Commendo moenia, dixit, —cum Jove. See sup. 18.

55. centum in aris,] 'On many altars.'—mensis honor. Compare iv. 85.—levior quovis, i. e. inter levisimos.

58. suburbani] Any place within a dozen miles of Rome seems to have been so called. See on iii. 667.

59. Aricia] See iii. 263. This place was famed for the worship of Diana rather than Juno; but the poet only says that there also was a month called in honour of Juno. Lanuvium was noted for its temple of Juno Sospita (see on Propert. v. (iv.) 8), Praeneste for that of Fortune and the Praenestinae sortes. This place, like Tusculum, was founded by Telegonus, son of Circe and Ulysses (Plutarch, Parallel. xli.); and perhaps the poet alludes to it, rather than to Tusculum, in iii. 92.

63. Nec Romulus, &c.] 'If these places honour me, how much more ought Rome, built by my grandson, to do so.'

65. Herculis uxor] Here follows a suggestion that Junius may come from Juventas, or Hebe, as she was the wife of Hercules, and that hero had been connected with Rome. This origin of the name is to be distinguished from that which follows, ver. 83, seqq., though the poet has chosen to unite them under one speech. The same laxity is observable inf. 119—168.—For dolentis most MSS. give vigoris or decoris.

67. mater] Juno.—toto caelo cedere, 'to resign my place even in heaven itself,' i. e. much less would I contend with her about the honour of a name.

71. precando;] Hence our term 'precarious,' i. e. what is dependent on sufferance only, and the arbitrary will of another. So Tac. Agric. 16: 'Trebellius—indecorus atque humilis precario mox praefuit.'—mei juris means, 'though I have a right to it, I prefer to hold it only as a concession.'

75. decus omne] This is not strictly true, as Merkel shows (p. cxcii.); for Juventas had at least one temple in Rome. Livy xxxvi. 36. The argument is well condensed by Gierig: 'Matri satis dignitatis est; non debet filiae unicum, quem habet, honorem eripere.'

81. flammis, &c.] See on i. 574.

83. propiora] 'More directly connected with Rome;' as Romulus stood in nearer relation to it than Hercules. — ab annis, secundum aetatem. Gierig quotes Macrobius i. 12: 'Fulvius Nobilior' (see supr. 1) 'in Fastis Romulum dicit, postquam populum in majores minoresque divisit, ut altera armis rempublicam tueretur, in honorem utriusque partis hunc Maium, sequentem Junium vocasse.'

85, 86.] Compare vv. 59—62.

90. pietas] The affection which ought to exist between mother and daughter.—dissimulata, celata, occulta. The word properly implies deliberate and intentional concealment, and is here somewhat laxly used. Compare iii. 748.

92. opus ducis.] This is not, as Merkel has shown in an elaborate and ingenious argument, p. cclx., the temple of 'Concordia Augusta,' dedicated afterwards by Tiberius, but Peace is spoken of as the work of Augustus. See i. 288. Concord is represented as crowned with bay, not only as the result of the Emperor's victories, but in reference to the temple of Apollo Palatinus, built by him.

94. cum populis suis.] 'Each with their respective people.' Rome was formed, the reader will remember,

 Binaque cum populis regna coisse suis,
 Et Lare communi soceros generosque receptos ; 95

99. pares] Usually said of two only, who are well-matched, or 'pairs.' Here applied to Juno, Hebe, and Concord, whose claims the poet pronounces equal. Compare v. 110.—judice. 'The decision of Paris proved the ruin of Troy. Better to leave all the competitors in a good humour, than to offend many by pleasing one.'

101. Carna,] There seem to have been two opinions about the origin of this obscure local deity : one, that she was a sort of female Janus, Cardea or Cardina ; another, which derived the name from caro, carnis. The latter is supported by Macrobius, i. 12 (Merkel, p. cxcv.), who says that she presided over and preserved human vitals. Now it is clear that Ovid has rather clumsily combined these two quite distinct attributes under a continuous narrative ; for in ver. 155, seqq., he speaks of Cranae as supplying a charm to protect the viscera of infants from ravenous birds,—that charm being a thorny branch obtained from Janus, the god of doors, &c. (i. 120.)

105. Helerni :] See ii. 67. Merkel (p. clxxxii.) thinks that the Chapel of Carna, which was on Mount Coelius, no longer existed in the poet's time, and that he therefore speaks of her rites as held in the grove of Helernus, on account of its connexion with Janus and the Janiculum.

107. Cranaen] This attempt to Grecise a genuine Italian cultus seems to be due to the poet himself.

111. tamen] For Diana was regularly equipped with a quiver.

Credebant; nec erat, Phoebe, pudenda tibi.
 Huic aliquis juvenum dixisset amantia verba,
 Reddebat tales protinus illa sonos:
 Haec loca lucis habent nimis et cum luce pudoris; 115
 Si secreta magis ducis in antra, sequor.
 Credulus ante ivit; frutices haec nacta resistit,
 Et latet et nullo est invenienda modo.
 Viderat hanc Janus, visaeque cupidine captus
 Ad duram verbis mollibus usus erat: 120
 Nympha jubet quaeri de more remotius antrum;
 Utque comes sequitur destituitque ducem.

 Sunt avidae volucres: non quae Phineïa mensis
 Gutturum fraudabant, sed genus inde trahunt.
 Grande caput, stantes oculi, rostra apta rapinae,
 Canities pennis, unguibus hamus inest.

113. dixisset] See on i. 315; and compare iv. 487. 'Should one have spoken.' In Greek, ταύτη τις ἔλεγε αὐ, where an action is represented as done at various and indefinite times.

117. frutices nacta resistit,] As soon as she came into the shelter of the brushwood, she stopped short.

124. latebras] She had slipped aside into a dark recess as he preceded her into the cave.—et, i. e. etiam. Some read en.

131. avidae volucres:] The ancients, as mentioned on v. 204, attributed any sudden disappearance to 'Harpies;' and it is probable that this idea, combined with the circumstance of an infant having been really lacerated by a fierce and powerful screech-owl, gave rise to the curious story which follows. The notion that these birds were a sort of magic creation (ver. 141) arose from their hovering about tombs at night; and hence, in turn, their feathers were used in incantations (Propert. iv. (iii.) 6. 29. Hor. Epod. v. 19). Becker, Gallus, p. 120, speaks of this strange superstition in a somewhat different manner, and without giving his authorities. He calls them strigae, and represents them simply as invisible witches, more resembling the Banshee of the Scotch, which carried away the body of a dead child, and left a straw doll in its place. Keightley says that the Italian name for a witch is still strega.—Phineïa guttura. See Virg. Aen. iii. 211.

135. egentes] 'Non habentes.'

Keightley. Rather, perhaps, 'wanting their nurse,' and crying for her, so as to attract the birds.—lactentia viscera of course refers to this; for the Romans fancied that a youngling, while it suckled, had 'more of milk than blood in it,' plus lactis quam sanguinis, Juven. xi. 68.

139. strigibus] From στρίγειν or τριγειν.—For nocte Heinsius with great probability suggested voce. Or did the poet write horrendum? We have 'horrendum stridens' in Aen. vi. 288.

142. falsa] Some inferior MSS. give Marsa, a good reading as far as sense is concerned, for the Marsi were notorious for witchery. See Virg. Aen. vii. 758. Hor. Epod. xvii. 27. Falsa must mean fallax.

Gierig compares Amor. i. 8. 13:—

'Hanc ego nocturnas vivam volitare per umbras
Suspicio, et pluma corpus anile tegi.'

143. Procae.] Procas or Proca was an early king of Alba, iv. 52. The construction is, 'in illis thalamis erat Proca, natus quinque diebus, praeda recens.'

149. color oris] The 'pallor luteus' of Hor. Epod. v. 16. This comparison of an Italian complexion with the sere and yellow leaf will be understood by the note on iii. 493. Martial xii. 32. 8: 'et non recenti pallidus magis buxo.'

156. arbutea fronde] Perhaps this was used for sprinkling the lustral water.

162.] Compare v. 438.—libavit. See i. 653.—respicere, v. 437.

165. Virga Janalis] See ver. 129. Whether our 'whitethorn' (Crataegus oxyacantha) is meant, as Keightley thinks, is, perhaps, questionable. The real explanation of a ceremony to which a magic import was attached may be reasonably looked for in the natural process of stopping up apertures in houses with thorns, to keep out mischievous birds. This is just what is still done to prevent owls and jackdaws from entering barns or church-steeple. Gierig shows from Dioscorides that it was considered a potent spell against witchcraft.

169. larda] The reason assigned for eating beans and bacon on the first of June is the same as that given for the moretum, iv. 370, viz. that it is a reminiscence of the primitive food of man. From ver. 182 it might be inferred that this food pertained to the festival of Carna, from some notion that it was favourable to digestion. Beans however were much used in magic rites. See ii. 576; v. 436.

173. sine fraude] This may mean sine danno sibi illato. Gierig prefers to understand sine insidiis.

175. quam praebet Ionia] The attagen (ἀτταγῆν), the hazel-hen, or moor-fowl. It is mentioned by Hor. Epod. ii. 54, and Martial, xiii. 61, who calls it 'inter saporis alitum primus.'—Pygmaeo, &c., the crane: Juven. xiii. 167.

177. pavone] The Romans, it is well-known, thought the flesh of this bird a delicacy. The 'peacock-feast' of the middle ages was borrowed

 Et potes hunc saevo tradere, dure, coco ?'

Both Heinsius and Merkel consider the pentameter corrupt, but their conjectural emendations are extravagant.—arte for ante seems probable, and is found in one MS.

179. festa colebant :] Juven. xi. 82:

'Sicci terga suis, rara pendentia crate,

181. sextis Kalendis] The first of June, the sixth of the twelve-month year; as Sextilis, or August, was the sixth of the old cyclic year.

183. Monetae] See on i. 231. 637. What is known of this temple, on the arx of the Capitol, is given by Merkel, p. cxxxiv., who refers to Livy vii. 28, and xlii. 7. It was dedicated in the year of the city 410, and restored in 581. The site was the house of Manlius, who was put to death for treason, and the house itself razed to the ground in 371. See the whole story in Livy vi. 20. Adjoining it was the Mint. Livy says it was vowed by Camillus in the battle against the Aurunci. Cicero, however, gives a different account, De Div. i. 45. 101: 'Scriptum a multis est, quum terrae motus factus esset, ut sue plena procuratio fieret, vocem ab aede Junonis illam appellatam Monetam.'

187. pugna in illa] See Livy v. 47. Keightley compares Juven. x. 276, &c.

190. longa senecta] 'Nam si prius esset extinctus, non incidisset in suspicionem regni affectati.' Gierig.

192. porta Capena] The temple of Mars 'ante portam Capenam' was dedicated A.U.C. 367. See Livy vi. 5. Merkel, p. cxxxv., gives reasons for thinking it was nearly a mile distant from that gate. It stood near the Via Appia. 'The Martial mentions it, viii. 75. 2 : 'Lingonus a Tecta Flaminiae reens.' At this temple it was the custom to offer arms on the safe return of a military expedition. Propert. v. (iv.) 3, ult. :

'Armaque cum tulero portae votiva Capenae,
Subscribam, Salvo grata puella viro.'

—quem prospicit, &c. The porta Capena commanded a view of it from without. It was built on a clivus, or raised slope ; see Merkel, ut sup.

193. Te quoque, &c.] A third temple dedicated on the first of June was that to 'Weather,' Tempestati or Tempestatibus, by Lucius Cornelius Scipio, son of L. Corn. Scipio Barbatus, in A. U. C. 495, after expelling the Carthaginians from Corsica. The celebrated sepulchral inscription to this hero (which still exists, and is given with comments in Varronianus, p. 222), mentions this circumstance : 'Hec cepit Corsicam Aleriamque urbem. Dedet tempestatibus aidem merito.' This temple also stood near the Porta Capena. Merkel, p. cxxxv.

195. patent] 'are visible to the eyes of all ;' whereas constellations have to be 'looked for,' or the time of their rising observed. The rising of Aquila and the Hyades was recorded supra v. ad fin. But on May 26th, they only began to appear, whereas June 1 and 2 they were fully visible above the horizon. See on v. 165. Cic. de Nat. Deor. ii. 43 : 'corniger est valido connexus corpore Taurus : ejus caput stellis conspersum est frequentibus : has Graeci stellae Hyadas vocitare suerunt, a pluendo ; ἕειν enim est pluere : nostri imperite suculas, quasi a subus essent, non ab imbribus nominatae.'

201. Bellona] This temple was dedicated in the year 458 by Appius Claudius Caecus. Livy x. 19 : 'Bellona, si hodie nobis victoriam duis, ast ego tibi templum voveo.' This was the year of his consulship, in which he fought against the Samnites and Etruscans.

203. Pyrrho, &c.] This is added to define which Appius was meant, not with any reference to the building of the temple. He was that blind old man who caused himself

205. Circum.] The Circus Flaminius, in the southern end of the Campus Martius. Varro L. L. v. § 154: 'Circus Flaminius dicitur, qui circum aedificatus est Flaminium campum.' — summum, i. e. 'partem anteriorem,' or front. The area commanded a view of the circus a tergo, and therefore lay between the back of the temple and the circus. Gierig reads a templo, with two or three MSS. of little note. The column perpetuated the remembrance of an ancient custom of declaring war by hurling a spear into the territory of an enemy (Livy i. 32). Cic. de Republ. ii. 17: 'constituit idem (sc. Tullus Hostilius) jus, quo bella indicerentur; quod per se iustissime inventum sanxit fetiali religione, ut omne bellum, quod denuntiatum indictumque non esset, id injustum esse atque impium judicaretur.'

209.] Of the temple of Hercules Custos nothing further is known than what Ovid has here recorded; that it was built by Sulla the dictator by the order of the Sibylline books. Merkel thinks (p. cxxxv.) that probavit opus (212) refers to the dictatorial power in this instance, though usually said of Censors, when they approved the execution of any public work (Livy iv. 22). See v. 559. Plutarch also, Q. R. § 98, speaks of the Censor's duty, ἐπισκοπεῖν καὶ πολυπραγμονεῖν ἰερά καὶ δημόσια. Merkel explains the title Custos (p. cc.) as equivalent to παραστάτης, the trainer or 'backer,' in gymnastics.

211. Lucifer] Cic. de Nat. D. ii. 20: 'stella Veneris, quae Φωσφόρος Graece, Latine dicitur Lucifer, quum antegreditur solem, quum subsequitur autem, "Ἑσπερος.'

213. Sanco] Sancus was the Sabine name for Hercules. Merkel (p. ccx.) thinks it means 'deum qui sancit;' for which etymology he might have adduced the direct authority of Propertius, v. (iv.) 9. 73:—

'Hunc, quoniam manibus purgatum sanxerat orbem,
Sic Sanctum Tatiae composuere
Cures.'

See the Editor's note on this passage, and Varronianus, p. 6. Semo is supposed to be a Sabine word for deus. Thus 'Semo Sanctus,' 'the god who ratifies,' i. e. preserves the laws of hospitality, is in Latin 'Deus Fidius,' 'the god of good faith,' Ζεὺς Πίστιος. Hence too the well-known phrase, 'medius fidius,' ita me juvet Deus Fidius, is supposed to be derived. See Merkel, pp. ccx., cxxxvi., who remarks that a temple to Sancus was dedicated A. U. C. 288 (Dionys. ix. 60), but that an older 219, seqq.] He shows that the first half of June was regarded as unlucky for marriages, religiosum tempus, like the feast of Mars, iii. 393, the Feralia, ii. 559, and the Lemuria, v. 487.—Filia. See Trist. iv. 10. 75, whence it appears that she was twice married and had issue. Her name was Perilla, Trist. iii. 7. 1.—sit diuturnior, ‘may she survive me!’ ‘Votum admodum solemne parentum, Romanorum in primis, quibus magnum solatium mori superstitibus suis.’ Gierig.

226. conjunx Dialis] The Flaminica ; see ii. 27.

227. Iliaca Vesta] The temple of Vesta was annually swept out on the fifteenth of June (inf. 713), and the dirt, as a sacred thing, including the ashes of the old year’s sacred fire (iii. 144), carried into the Tiber, or, according to Festus, to an alley half-way up the Capitol (‘in angu-portum medium fere clivi Capitolini’) which seems to have been a sort of religious dust-hole, ‘qui locus clauditur porta stercoraria ; tantae sanctitatis majores nostri esse judicaverunt.’ The custom of throwing piacula, καθάρματα, or the refuse after any magic rite, into running water, is illustrated by Virg. Ecl. viii. 101. The ancients seem to have thought that the moral pollution passed from the thing or person cleansed, into the thing employed in the ceremony ; just as material dirt passes into soap-suds. And they seem to have extended this principle to comprise the remnants of all consecrated articles, which they disposed of with a natural and laudable reverence. Varro L. L. vi. § 32 : ‘Dies qui vocatur : Quando stercum delatum, fas, ab eo appellatus quod eo die ex aede Vestae stercus everritur et per Capitolinum clivom in locum deferretur certum.’ This therefore was a dies nefastus prior, or half-holiday.

229. depectere] See iii. 398.—buxo, a comb of box-wood. For detonsae, the reading of the early editions, almost all the MSS. give detonso. One only has dentoso, which is worthy of some consideration. Martial xiv. 25: 'multifido buxus quae tibi dente datur.' But the meaning is, 'nec detondere nec depectere,' a peculiar use of the negative, for which see Virg. Aen. vii. 498. Propert. v. (iv.) 9. 22.

232. perpetua lege] The marriage performed by confarreatio was indissoluble. The strict secubitus of the Flaminica for a certain period seems to have set the fashion, as it were, though without any public sanction, of differing marriages at the same period.

234. nitebit] 'Shall be free from dirt.'—pura humo, 'after the pavement has been swept.'

236. metum.] Because Arctophylax, or the Bear-ward, has set. Lycaona, the grandson of Lycaon, Arcas, who was about to kill his mother Callisto changed into a bear, but was transferred to the constellation by Jupiter. See ii. 181, seqq.; iii. 405.

238. tuos.] The Feast of Fishermen was held on the Campus Martius close to the river, so that they were also, perhaps, called ludi Tiberini. Gierig quotes the following from Festus: 'Piscatorii ludi vocantur, qui quotannis mense Junio trans Tiberim fieri solent a Praetore urbano pro piscatoribus Tiberinis: quorum quaestus non in macellum pervenit, sed fere in aream Volcani; quod id genus pisciculorum vivorum datur ei deo pro animis humanis.' The last words throw some light on iii. 342.

241. Mens] A temple to 'Intellect,' or 'Good Sense,' was voted in the second Punic war, A. U. 537, by T. Otacilius, after the death of the Consul Flaminius at Lake Trasimenus. As usual under similar circumstances, authority for it was found in the Sibylline books. See Livy xxii. 6. 8, 9, 10. It stood on the Capitol. Livy xxiii. 31. Propertius clearly alludes to this deity when he says, iv. (iii.) 24. 19: 'Mens Bona, si qua dea es, tua me in sacraria dono.' Cic. de Nat. Deor. ii. 23. 61: 'res ipsa, in qua vis inest major aliqua, sic appellatur, ut ea ipsa nominetur deus, ut Fides, ut Mens, quas in Capitolio dedicatas videmus.—Quid Opis? quid Salutis? quid Concordiae? Libertatis? Victoriae? quarum omnium rerum quia vis erat tanta ut sine deo regi non posset, ipsa res deorum nomen obtinuit.' The meaning of mens and animus, Dr. Donaldson well observes in Varronianus, p. 146, is closely represented by the English terms 'head' and 'heart.' Thus Horace, Epist. i. 14. 8, has 'istuc mens animusque fert,' i. e. 'judgment and inclination;' but Lucretius (iv. 760) combines 'mens animi' for 'the senses,' and Catullus (lxv. 4) for 'ingenium.'

242. perfide Poene.] See on iii. 148. Cicero is said to have used the affected term 'foedifragi Afri' (Schol. on Hor. Od. iv. 8. 17).

244. Mauras manus.] 'In exercitu Hannibalis etiam Mauri erant. Liv. 21, 22.' Gierig.

247. mediis sex lucibus] 'The day of the dedication falls six days before the ides.' Keightley says: 'with six days between them, that is, inclusive of both, in the usual Roman mode of expression: in reality there are only four.' The ides of June fall on the 13th, and the dedication of Mens is marked in the 'Tabula Maffiana' against the 8th.

249. operata] i. e. sacris tuis, 'engaged on your worship.' See iii.

261. Vesta, it is hardly necessary to add, was one of the oldest and most important of all the Roman deities. As the Greeks had their equivalent Ἑστία, and the sacred fire of the Prytaneum, and as the cultus of Vesta seems to have been peculiarly Trojan, we may conclude she was a Pelasgic deity like Janus, and connected with the same ancient Fire-worship which has always prevailed in the East. Whether introduced at Rome by the Sabines, through Numa, as Varro says (L. L. v. § 74), or brought with other Pelasgic gods from Troy, cannot now be ascertained; but a worship so extensive may have existed under some form or other in every people of Indo-Germanic origin. The connexion of Vesta with the Earth seems to have been due to Pythagoras, who taught that the earth revolved round a central fire or focus of the universe.

254. viro.] Her temple was only entered by the Vestals. Inf. 451.

256. nullo praecipiente] He speaks of the same secret communication as supra v. 6. Whereas on ordinary matters he had to ask for information from others, the knowledge about Vesta was supernaturally imparted.

257. Palilia] Vesta had some part to perform in this festival, iv. 732; he means therefore, that for forty years it was celebrated at Rome

Regis opus placidi, quo non metuentius ullum
 Numinis ingenium terra Sabina tulit. 260
 Quae nunc aere vides, stipula tunc tecta videres, Et paries lento vimine textus erat.

 [Ipsa volubilitas libratum sustinet orbem:
 Quique premat partes, angulus omnis abest.

without her.—Regis placidi, i. e. Numa, in the second year of whose reign the first temple of Vesta was built.

264. intonsi] See ii. 30. Merkel (p. cxxxvii. seqq.) seems to think that the atrium here mentioned, which was not identical with the Regia, or residence of the Pontifex, stood in the same area with it, and separate from the Temple. It is the 'monumenta regis' of Horace, Od. i. 2. 16. It was the abode of the Vestals. 'The temple of Vesta, being the focus of the state, was naturally placed in a central position, that is, in the valley between the Roman town on the Palatine, and the Sabine on the Quirinal and Tarpeian. It therefore stood by the Forum, about where the church of Sta. Maria Liberatrice now stands, on its south side, just where the Sacra Via entered it. The fount or pool of Juturna lay between it and the temple of Castor on the left, while on the right, by the Sacra Via, and closely adjoining it, was the Regia. What we name the temple consisted of two parts; the temple, properly so called, and the Atrium Vestae. The latter was in front, facing the Forum: see Becker, Handbuch, i. p. 222, seq.' (Keightley, Excursus vii. p. 243.) In obtaining some idea of the sites of the various temples,—a subject of great difficulty and obscurity, and therefore not to be too much pressed upon young students,—it will be sufficient to refer to the small but useful map of the city of Rome given under Roma in the smaller 'Classical Dictionary.'

268. terra focusque] i. e. 'et Terra et Vesta significant propriam cujusque sedem,' sc. et domum et patriam. So Merkel explains this obscure verse, p. ci.: 'Quia Latini dixerunt sedem pro foco patrio, et pro terra patria, inde concluditur Terram et Vestalem focum non esse diversos.' He also, ibid., quotes Festus, p. 262: 'Rotundam aedem Vestae Numa Pompilius rex Romanorum consecrasset videtur, quod eandem esse terram, qua vita hominum sustentaretur, crediderit, eamque pilae forma esse, ut sui simili templo dea coleteretur.'

271—276.] The verses within brackets are probably spurious, though their composition is sufficiently Ovidian. They are found only in a few inferior MSS., and were first printed by Aldus in 1502. Gierig first inclosed them in brackets, and Merkel has omitted them from

 Et tangat nullum plusve minusve latus;

 Nec medium terram mundus haberet onus.]

his text. Keightley thinks they may be genuine, but omitted by the monks, as teaching the rotation of the earth contrary to Scripture, as they maintained. It does not however appear that any thing is said about rotation: volubilitas only means 'the capability to rotate,' 'roundness,' and implies that the world remains in the centre because it is not drawn away in any one direction more than another. Cicero, de Nat. Deor. i. 8. 18, enumerates among the opinions of philosophers 'mundum rotundum, volubilem, ardentem deum.' Ibid. ii. 19. 49: 'ex utraque re et mundi volubilitas, quae nisi in globosa forma esse non posset, et stellarum rotundi ambitus cognoscuntur.'

275. Ni convexa foret,] He means to say, that unless the world were round, it could not accurately be called central; for one or other of its projecting angles would be nearer to other parts of the universe.

277. Arte Syracosia] Archimedes is said to have invented a sphere or globe to represent the vault of heaven (polus); and he so suspended it in aëre clauso,—perhaps in a glass case,—as to show the parts perfectly detached. (See the note on Propert. v. (iv.) l. 82, where mention is made of the 'obliquae signa iterata rotae.') In this ingenious model of the solar system, according to Aristotle's view, the planets seem to have been represented, and the earth in the centre; see ver. 279, where the words summis and imis imply that the heavenly bodies were not in one plane, or at least, if so, hung in a vertical position.—For arte, the reading of all the best copies, Merkel and Gierig give arce. But this would be less appropriate, for the sphere was not then at Syracuse, but had been brought to Rome by Marcellus after the capture of that city, and deposited in the temple of Virtue: see Cic. de Repub. i. 14; Tusc. Disp. i. 25; De Nat. Deor. ii. 35. 88. If so, perhaps Ovid had seen it, as well as Claudian, who has the following epigram upon it:—

'Jura poli, rerumque fidem, legesque deorum,
 Ecce Syracosius transtulit arte senex.
 Inclusus variis famulatur spiritus
 astris,
 Et vivum certis motibus urget
 opus.'

The two last verses, which are difficult to understand, apparently correspond to Ovid's aëre clauso, and might be taken to mean that the orrery was moved by compressed air. On the other hand, the testimony of Athenaeus (v. 11, p. 207) is adduced to show that the orrery of Archimedes was really kept in the arx or capitol of Syracuse.

- Ex Ope Junonem memorant Cereremque creatas 285

 Nec tu aliud Vestam, quam vivam intellige flammam;
 Nataque de flamma corpora nulla vides.
 Jure igitur virgo est, quae semina nulla remittit,
 Nec capit: et comites virginitatis habet.

 Causaque par Graii nominis esse potest. 300
 At focus a flammis et quod fovet omnia dictus;
 Qui tamen in primis aedibus ante fuit.
 Hinc quoque vestibulum dici reor, unde precamur
 Et famur: Vesta est quae loca prima tenet.

283. tholus.] θόλος, a dome or hemispherical roof.

285. Ex Ope, &c.] Hesiod. Theog. 453: 'Ρεῖα δ' ὑπόδηθεῖσα Κρόνῳ τέκε φαίδιμα τέκνα, 'Ιστίην, Δήμητρα, καὶ Ἥρην χρυσοπέδιλον. To unravel the exact distinctions between the Italian Ops, the Greek 'Ρεῖα or 'Ρέα, the Asiatic Cybele or Magna Mater, Vesta, and Tellus, would be the task of an acute philologist. Tibullus evidently identifies Ops with Cybele, i. 4. 68: 'Idaeae currus ille sequatur Opis.' The curious reader may refer to Merkel, p. ccxl.

290. castas] i. e. 'non nisi castas.'

295. simulacra] 'Numinis sanctitati et quasi descriptioni accedere nihil potuit a simulacro affabre facto, praesertim cum penus interior' (i. e. the sacred inclosure of the inextinct fire) 'viris ocludi, matronis non nisi aliquot circa Vestalia diebus patere soleret. Itaque inter erudita et graecanica figmenta ipsa imago dae referenda est, quae commemoratur a Cicerone de Nat. Deor. 3. 32, § 80. Ovidio iii. 45, coll. 698.' Merkel, p. ccxlvii.

299. vi stando] This derivation is obviously absurd. Ovid did not perceive that Vesta and 'Εστία were really the same words. Cic. de Nat. Deor. ii. 27: 'Vestae nomen a Graecis est; ea est enim quae ab illis 'Εστία dicitur.' There seems no good reason for referring it to Ἰστυμῆ.

302. in primis aedibus] In the atrium. In later times, as observed on i. 135, the fire-place was removed from its original position to a separate apartment, where alone it could properly be said 'fovere omnia.' Merkel, p. clxxxiii., takes aedibus for aede, i. e. the temple of Vesta, before which, he infers from ver. 308, they used formerly to feast. But this seems an arbitrary interpretation.

303. vestibulum] The word is

Ante focos olim scamnis considerare longis 305
 Mos erat, et mensae credere adesse deos.
 Nunc quoque, cum fiunt antiquae sacra Vacunae,
 Ante Vacunales stantque sedentque focos.
 Venit in hos annos aliquo de more vetustas ;
 Fert missos Vestae pura patella cibos. 310
 Ecce, coronatis panis dependet asellis
 Et velant scabras florea sarta molas.
 Sola prius furnis torrebant farra coloni ;
 Et Fornacali sunt sua sacra deae.

really from ve and stare, as prostibulum from pro stare, and means 'that which stands outside or beyond.' See Becker, Gallus, p. 239 ; supra i. 135. The passage which follows is obscure, and the readings are very various. Merkel's view is ingenious, that vestibulum is said in the rhetorical sense of 'commencement,' as Cic. Orat. 15 : 'Vestibula nimirum honesta aditusque ad causam faciet illustres.' The meaning then will be : 'Hence too (i.e. from Vesta) we name the beginning of our prayers and conversation, because it is Vesta who occupies the first place or front of a house.' Cicero, De Nat. D. ii. 27, seems to state the very opposite : 'itaque in ea dea, quae est rerum custos intimarum, omnis et precatio et sacrificatio extrema est.' Both indeed might be true, if the Vestibule is regarded as the beginning, and the focus, or interior, the end or destination to be attained.

305. Ante focos] The simple and natural sense is, 'There was an old custom for the household to dine before the hearth in the atrium sitting on benches.' So Virg. Aen. vii. 176 : 'perpetuis soliti patres considerare mensis.' See also Tac. Ann. xiii. 16. Thus they were in the immediate presence of Vesta and the Lar familiaris, to whom an offering of meat was sent, probably to be consumed on the hearth. Merkel however (ut sup.) is obliged to admit 'deos quos innuat poeta, obscurius est,' as he insists on understanding the passage of sitting before the temple of Vesta.—Gierig and Keightley, after many MSS., read longis—scamnis. But Virgil preferred to place the adjective at the end of the verse under similar circumstances, Aen. viii. 662 : 'scutis protecti corpora longis.' It has been suggested on Propert. v. 4. 48, that the s was dropped in pronunciation, when the metre required it.

307. Vacunae,] An ancient Sabine goddess, by some identified with Victoria. See the commentators on Hor. Ep. i. 10. 49.

310. patella] See on ii. 634. The offering of patellae, plates of meat, to the focus, or fire-place, is distinct from the 'necklace of loaves' which follows, and which may be regarded as an old reminiscence of the mills being placed under the tutelage of Vesta, because the Vestals used to prepare the molae, or sacred flour, for sacrifice. Merkel distinguishes the mill, to which the asses belonged, from the bakehouse or kiln mentioned by the poet in connexion with fire ver. 315, &c. Compare Propert. v. (iv.) l. 21 : 'Vesta coronatis pauper gaudebat asellis.'—scabras, because the mill-stone is made rough. The Greeks called the stone itself ōvos, but the asellae here mentioned are the animals, as is certain from ver. 347.

313. furnis] The meaning is, that the furnis was anciently used as a kiln ad torrendum far, and bread was baked on the fire-place.

- Suppositum cineri panem focus ipse parabat, 315
 Strataque erat tepido tegula quassa solo.
 Inde focum servat pistor dominamque focorum
 Et quæ pumiceas versat asella molas.
 Praeteream referamne tuum, rubicunde Priape,
 Dedecus? est multi fabula parva joci. 320
 Turrigera frontem Cybele redimita corona Convocat aeternos ad sua festa deos.
 Convocat et satyros, et, rustica numina, nymphas.
 Silenus, quamvis nemo vocarat, adest.
 Nec licet, et longum est, epulas narrare deorum: 325
 In multo nox est pervigilata mero.
 Hi temere errabant in opacae vallibus Idae,
 Pars jacet et molli gramine membra levat,
 Hi ludunt, hos somnus habet, pars brachia nectit
 Et viridem celeri ter pede pulsat humum. 330
 Vesta jacet placidamque capit segura quietem,
 Sicut erat, positum cespite fulta caput.
 At ruber hortorum custos nymphasque deasque
 Captat et errantes fertque refertque pedes.
 Aspicit et Vestam; dubium, nymphamne putarit, 335
 An scierit Vestam; scisse sed ipse negat.
 Spem capit obscaenam furtimque accedere temptat,
 Et fert suspensos, corde micante, gradus.

Afterwards, the furnus became a regular oven or bakehouse. The word is perhaps from foveo, for fovernus.

314. Fornaculi] See ii. 521, &c. As fur (spelt) alone was used for bread (ii. 519), and as this always required the heat of the kiln in thoroughly drying it, the aid of Vesta (fire) was invoked, though subsequently a distinct deity called Fornax claimed the honours.

316. tegula quassa] The fire-place was either paved with bricks, as ovens sometimes are to this day; or they placed the dough on a brick and heaped ashes over, or round it, as many savage tribes are said to do. The Greeks had their ἄρτος ἐγκρυφίας.

317. servat] Observat, honorat.

—pumiceas, of basalt or trachyte, which makes excellent millstones, and is still used for that purpose in volcanic countries.—pistor, from pinso, is, in its primary sense, not 'a baker,' but 'a pounder,' or grinder of corn. In this place it seems to combine the two trades; as likewise in ver. 394.

320. parva] Many good copies give plena. Cf. ii. 304. This story about Priapus, which Merkel thinks either Alexandrine or the invention of the poet, has already occurred with very little difference in i. 391, seqq. 'Dubium vix est, quin altero utro loco illam subtraxisset Ovidius, si carmen absolvisset; credo posteriori.' Merkel, p. clxv.

338. corde micante,] See iii. 36.

 Exigis: Alpino Roma sub hoste jacet.

Cic. de Nat. Deor. ii. 9. 24: 'jam vero venae et arteriae micare non desinunt, quasi quodam igneo motu.'

345. Lampsacos] It was reasonable for the Lampsacenes to immolate an ass to a god locally worshipped among them; but damus seems to refer to the Romans, who are not known to have offered such a sacrifice. Perhaps the requirements of the metre induced the poet to use the word quite generally.—apta, Merkel remarks, is a sacrificial word; but the obvious sense, 'fit,' or 'appropriate,' seems sufficient.

347. de pane monilibus] See sup. 311. κριβανωτῶν ὀρμαθῶ, Arist. Plut. 764. 'They are evidently those cakes made in the form of a ring, which may still be seen in France and Italy, and of which a parcel was hung round the necks of the asses.' Keightley.

350. Dicam] It is not clear whether the feast of Jupiter Pistor really fell on this day, or whether the story is added here by way of an anecdote connected with the subject, and involving some action on the part of Vesta (ver. 380). The altar itself in the Capitol was little frequented or heeded, as appears from the preceding verse. Merkel infers from Servius on Aen. viii. 652, and an inscription found at Rome, that this was identical with Jupiter Conservator, under whose patronage the company or guild of bakers seem to have been placed. The story told in the following verses is briefly given by Livy v. 48.

355. malorum;] One MS. has meorum, 'fortasse recte,' says Merkel; and so Gierig reads. Mars, it will be observed, as the father of Romulus, here assumes the character of patron and protector of the city.

361. suburbanos] All the tribes in its immediate neighbourhood, i. e. in a circle of ten or twenty miles. See iii. 667.—contudit, &c., 'it has already quelled the Etruscans, and its hopes were in mid career (v. 245), when, lo! it has been driven from the city, and is now besieged in the Capitol.' To take contudit for contuderat, with Keightley, is to injure the narrative, as Mars is the speaker.—Lare pulsa. See i. 482.

364. picta Veste] The 'toga picta' (Propert. v. 4. 53) was the triumphal dress. The well-known story of the senators and nobles sitting in their robes of office to receive the Gauls, hoping, in vain, that the majestas which had such influence over Roman minds would also overawe the barbarians, is given in Livy v. 41.

366. Putant scilicet] 'It is clear, from their pious conduct in transferring the sacred rites to Caere, that they believe the gods are something real; and yet, were they to turn their eyes to the Capitol where Jupiter is enshrined, and see it beleaguered, they would begin to suspect they had worshipped him in vain.'—scilicet conveys a slight irony: 'stulti illi adhuc putant deos esse aliquos.' Gierig. Cf. ver. 355.

367. qua vos habitatis in arce] i. e. 'arcem in qua,' &c., the Capitol, on which stood the temples of Jupiter, Juno, Minerva, and others.

375. trabea] See ii. 503, and on i. 37.

377. Publica cura] 'The preservation of Rome is not to be granted to the private partialities of Mars and Vesta, but is a matter which concerns us all.'

380. desere] Vesta had been transferred to a place of security, as far as related to the externals of her worship. But the goddess is required to remain, because fire would be wanted for the bakehouses.—superesse is περισσεύειν, 'to be more than sufficient.'

383. virgo Saturnia] Vesta. See sup. 285.

385. increpat] 'rouses.' So Tibull. i. l. 30: 'stimulo tardos increpuisse boves.' Gierig well compares Georg. iv. 71: 'morantes Martius ille aeris rauci canor increpat.' See also Aen. ix. 127.

391. Ceres visa est.] For 'visum est Cererem esse.' 'Conjectando eo delati sunt, ut crederent Cererem, i. e. panem intelligi.' Gierig, who reads ecce with a few second-rate MSS. Livy gives the story of the loaves, but only as a legend, v. 48.

395.] The poet returns to the Vestalia, and proceeds to give a reason for the procession of matrons with naked feet on that day. It is uncertain which road they took: 'Non credo Vestae aedem fuisse in ipso Velabro, sed matronas sollemni pompa circa aras spatiantes devenisse in sacellum ad infimam novam viam.' Merkel, p. clxxxiv. 'Ovid lived near the Capitol (see on iv. 905); and he was evidently going down from the Via Nova to the Forum on his way home. The Via Nova, commencing at the top of the Velia (at the arch of Titus), ran round the Palatine from the Porta Mugionis to the Porta Romanula over the Velabrum. It therefore lay above the temple of Vesta, to which and the Forum, it would seem, a street or way led down from it. That this had been lately made, appears from his saying nunc.' Keightley, who seems to be at variance with Merkel on the site of the temple of Vesta. See the latter, p. clii.

a vicus,' or 'parish' as we should call it.

401. udae paludes;) The procession still goes barefoot, because formerly they had to dabble in the marshy puddles of the Velabrum, the low ground between the Capitol and the Palatine, and the site of the Forum Boarium. That this part of the city, which is still very unhealthy, was once overflowed by the Tiber, is a tradition mentioned by many authors. See Propert. v. (iv.) 2. 7; and ib. 9. 5; Tibull. ii. 3. 33. Varro, L. L. v. § 43: 'olim paludibus mons (Aventinus) erat ab reliquis disclusus; itaque eo ex urbe advehantur ratibus: quoque vestigia, quod ea, qua tum vehantur, etiam nunc dicitur Velabrum.' By fossa Keightley understands the valley itself between the Capitol and Palatine. May it not mean, 'there was a ditch made to receive the river-water which had overflowed?'

403. Curtius lacus,] This may have been, as the most commonly received legend affirmed (Livy i. 13), a volcanic fissure, afterwards filled with water, and gradually closed up so effectually as to become dry and level ground, with an altar of Saturn on the spot. There was, however, as Varro says, L. L. v. § 148: 'de eo triceps historia;' and he gives the conflicting accounts consecutively. See on i. 267. Plutarch, Parallel. § 5, speaks of it as caused by the Tiber flowing through the middle of the Forum, and breaking a hole so as to lay many houses under water.

405. pompas,] The Velabrum itself is said 'to conduct the processions,' because they passed along it from the Forum Romanum to the Circus Maximus, which lay between the Palatine and the Aventine. Compare iv. 391: 'Circus erit pompa celebrer.'—cassa canna, bearing no edible fruit. Some read crassa.

408. Cantat] cantare solebat. Velabrum, as stated above, was supposed to come a vehendo, or from velum, because 'nauta per urbanas velificabat aquas.' Propert. v. 9. 6.

410. deus,] Vertumnus, whose statue stood in the Vicus Tuscus, between the Forum Romanum and Forum Boarium. In ignorance of the true etymology, which is explained on Propert. v. (iv.) 2. 2, they supposed his name was derived a vertendo amne, quasi Vertumnus. Propert. ibid. 10: 'Vertumnus verso dicor ab amne deus.'—diversis figuris. He could assume almost any character according to the dresses put on his statue.

414. mos] The custom of walking bare-footed. Sup. 397.

422. desiluisse] It was probably a meteoric stone. See on iv. 275. Apollodorus, iii. 12. 3, gives the story thus:—'The legend of the Palladium is as follows: Athene when first born was brought up with Triton, whose sister was Pallas. As both of them practised the arts of war, they once began to quarrel; and Pallas would have struck the other, but Jupiter held out his aegis to protect her. Pallas then raised her eyes in fear of it, when Athene wounded her, and she fell. Athene being distressed at this, made a wooden image of her to the life, dressed it in the aegis she had been so fatally afraid of, and setting it near Jupiter, paid it due honours. Afterwards, when Electra (daughter of Atlas) fled to it for refuge, he hurled it into the territory of Ilium, and Ilus, having picked it up, built a temple for it.' 'It was,' he says, 'three cubits high, with the feet placed together, and in the right hand bore a raised spear, in the other a distaff and spindle.'

423. Cura videre] 'Iter olim Ovidium fecisse in Asia, magnificasque ejus urbes perspexisse, ex i. Trist. 2. 77; ii. ex Pont. 10. 21, apparet.' Gierig. — Hoc superest. The temple remains, though the statue has been transferred to Rome.

431. Sic volebas,] She was, as it were, disgusted with Troy, even after the decision of Paris, and was thenceforth willing to leave the place.

433. genus Adrasti] Diomed, son of Tydeus and Deipyle, daughter of Adrastus.—datur, editur, narratur, perhibetur. But the usage is singular, and together with the equally unsatisfactory word revicta, v. 432, implies hasty writing, and a want of revision in this part of the poem. Virg. Aen. ii. 164 :—

‘Tydides sed enim, scelerumque inventor Ulixes, Fatale aggressi sacrato avellere templo
 Palladium, caesis summae custodibus arcis,
 Corripuere sacram effigiem ; manibusque cruentis
 Virgineas ausi divae contingere vittas.’

435. Auctor] sc. furandi. ‘Whoever it was that carried it off, it is now at Rome, and preserved in the temple of Vesta, because that goddess has a perpetual light to protect it from sacrilege.’ From this circumstance, the temple of Vesta is sometimes spoken of as that of Pallas. Hence Propert. v. (iv.) 4. 45 : ‘Pallados extinctos si quis mirabitur ignes, Ignoscat.’ See Trist. iii. 1. 29 : ‘Hic locus est Vestae, qui Pallada servat et ignem.’

438. Arsit] This event was about the beginning of the second Punic war. Lucius Caecilius Metellus was then Pontifex, and rescued the Palladium from the fire with the loss of his eyesight, for which act of intrepidity he was allowed the privilege of riding to the senate-house in a carriage. Plin. vii. 43. Keightley. Plutarch, Parallel. § 17 : Μέτελλος ἀνὴρ τῶν ἐπισήμων,— ἰδὼν τὸ τέμενος τῆς Ἑστίας καιόμενον, καὶ τὸ Παλλάδιον ἀρπάσας, ἐτυφλώθη· ὕστερον δὲ ἀνέβλεψεν ἐξιλασάμενος.

440. Mixta] See on ii. 557 and 645.

459. in illam Conditur.] This idiom is not without precedent. See Georg. i. 438. 442; iv. 66. Propert. ii. l. 42; iv. (iii.) 19. 16.—numen idem. See sup. 267.

461. Callaïco] The Gallaeci, Καλλαϊκοί, were a nation of the north of Spain, conquered by Decimus Brutus, who was Consul B.C. 138, and thence obtained the honorary surname of Callaecus. The word is often used by Martial. See Livy xxxvi. 10.

465. Crassus] On this disaster see v. 580. The day seems to have been kept as ater by the Romans, like the dies Alliensis, i. 60.

467. dixit dea.] Vesta is supposed to say this in order to connect the narrative with what precedes and follows.

Matuta, the goddess of Morning, and the Tuscan representative of Λευκοθέα, 'the white goddess.' See Varronianus, p. 147. Merkel, pp. ccxvi—ccxviii., who thinks the name derived from manus, an old word for 'good' (ii. 631). and that the poet alludes to this in ite bonae matres, rather than from mame and matutinus. He observes that Matuta could not originally have been a marine deity, since no Latin city in which her worship is known to have existed was on the sea coast. The latter attribute seems to have arisen from the name of her son Portunus. See inf. on 547. The Romans, fond of Grecising, readily adopted the legend of the Theban Ino, wife of Athamas, also called Leucothea or Leucothöe (Hertzberg on Propert. iii. 18. 10), and daughter of Cadmus. — liba. See inf. 531. The cakes were thrown, in the Greek worship of Ino, near Epidaurus, into a crater-lake, Pausan. iii. 23. 5, in allusion probably to her plunging into the sea. See Merkel, p. clxxxiv.

477. Pontibus] The Fabrician, and Palatine or Senatorian bridges, which led out of the Forum Boarium, the area here mentioned.— posito de bove. The name, according to the fancy of Propertius, v. 9. 19, was given from the lowing of Hercule's oxen, when part of them were stolen by Cacus. The brazen statue of the bull, which is here alluded to, was brought from Aegina, and set up there as in the most appropriate part of the city. Tac. Ann. xii. 24: 'a foro Boario ubi aereum tauri simulacrum aspiciamus,' where Ritter refers to Pliny, xxxiv. 5: 'bos aereus inde (Aegina) captus in foro Boario est Romae.'

480. Servi manus.] A temple to Matuta was first built by Servius Tullius. Livy, v. 23.

481. famulas] Infra 551. The construction is, 'quae dea sit, et quare, &c., Bacche doce.'

484. domus tua] Ino was sister of Semele, mother of Bacchus.

485. Arserat] Semele was said to have given birth to Bacchus in the midst of lightnings. See on iii. 715.—obsequio Jovis. By the compliance of Jupiter with her request, that he would visit her in the same terrors of his majesty in which he visited Juno: 'Corpus mortale tumultus Non tulit aetherios, donisque jugalibus arsit,' Met. iii. 308.—accipit Ino. See ibid. 313.

Verticibus densi Tibridis ora tenent.

Lucus erat: dubium Semelae Stimulaene vocetur ;

Maenadas Ausonias incoluisse ferunt.

487. rapta pellice, &c.] She was indignant that the child should be preserved when the mother had perished.

489. Hinc] In consequence of Juno's resentment, Athamas went mad, and killed his son Learchus, mistaking him for a lion's whelp; upon which Ino threw herself into the sea, with her other son Melicertes, from the Isthmus of Corinth. In this legend there seems some confusion with that of the death of Pentheus by his mother Agave.

493. haec quoque,] i. e. she also went mad like Athamas.

501. Nondum Leucothea,] 'Ea quae nondum Leucothea Dea erat, is, qui nondum Palaemon, jam tenebant ora, ostium, Tibridis.' Gierig. See inf. 545. In the orthography of the name there is considerable uncertainty. Many good MSS. in both places give Leucothoe, which Hertzberg (see sup. ver. 475) contends is the genuine and Homeric form (though Bekker edits Λευκοθήη in Od. v. 334), from λευκός and θέειν, θός, not from θεά, like Κυμοθόη Il. xviii. 41. The a is made long as in Amalthea, v. 115.

503. Stimulae] It seems probable that this was the name of a certain deu excitatrix, who was afterwards confounded with the Greek Semele, either from the similarity of sound, or from the connexion between any mental excitement and the Bacchic orgies. Livy, xxxix. 12, mentions the 'lucus Similae.' It was near the bank of the Tiber, and sufficiently close to the Aventine to throw back an echo (ver. 518). Merkel (p. cliii.) says that it is not elsewhere mentioned as the grove of this particular goddess except by the Schol. on Juvenal ii. 3. It appears from the latter passage to have been in bad repute as the scene of the same immoralities as were charged against the rites of Bacchus by Pentheus in Eurip. Bacch. 686. The poet, it will be observed, regards these rites as indigenous in Italy, as Virgil represents Amata, the wife of Latinus, embracing them with a mad enthusiasm, Aen. vii. 385, &c. See on iii. 725.

511. cognoscere ritum;) The orgies of Bacchus, like the mysteries of Ceres, were arcana. Hor. Od. i. 18. 11:

 Ite, precor, nostris aequus uterque locis !

This connexion between Matuta and Carmentis seems to have arisen from their common attribute of Ilithyia. Merkel, p. clxviii.

533. Nunc quoque] Supra 476. Varro, L. L. v. § 106: 'Libum, quod ut libaretur, priusquam essetur, erat coctum. Testuatium, quod in testu caldo coquebatur, ut etiam nunc Matralibus id faciunt matronae.'

535. resigna,] 'Unseal,' 'open.' Compare recludo. There are several senses of this particle re, which the student will do well to attend to. (1.) It is sometimes quite superfluous, i. e. it does not the least affect the sense of a word, as revicta, v. 432; refringit, Hor. Od. iii. 3. 28. (2.) It bears its true sense of an action repeated, as repetere, retractare, or going over the same ground in the same direction. (3.) It means to go back again over the same ground, as redire, but from B to A, instead of from A to B. (4.) It implies the contrary action by the association of contrast, as recludere, 'to open.' (5.) It implies passing into a new stage of existence. See on i. 112. (6.) It signifies to cancel or commute one thing for another, as rescribere, resignare, 'to pay back,' by transferring from debtor's to creditor's account. Hence resigno, 'I resign,' 'give up,' Hor. Od. iii. 29. 54.

547. Portunum,] This word is formed like Vertumnus, alumnus, Auctumnus, &c., from an old participle in -όμενος, and is therefore written both Portunus and Portumnus. Perhaps the verb itself was porto, portēre, afterwards portare, and equivalent to veho. Under one or other of his three names he was invoked by sailors for a safe return to the harbour. Virg. Georg. i. 436 :—

As Janus had the tutelage of doors, Januae, so Portunus of portus. This sort of allusive mythology is not very frequent. It is rather singular that some connexion seems to have existed between these two deities. Merkel, p. ccxvii., quotes Janus Portunus from an inscription, and adds : 'uterque deus claviger nihil aliud quam tuebatur aditus urbis publicos, sicut uterque praefuit privatis.' He thinks the name is derived from portus, which is said anciently to have signified 'a house.' Compare porticus, and see Varronianus, p. 207. There is some obscurity about the meaning of most words connected with this root. Mr. Maclean remarks on Horace (p. 305, school edition), that to reduce the various senses of 'importunus' to one primary sense, we must know more of its etymology.

551. vetet ancillas] Sup. 481. Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. § 16 : 'Why is the temple of Leucothea shut against female slaves? For the women admit only one, and then slap and buffet her. Or is this buffeting of one a token that the others are not permitted to enter, but are excluded on account of the legend, that Ino being jealous of a slave as her husband's paramour, went mad, and made away with her son?—With us also at Chacronica the porter stands in front of the temple of Leucothea with a whip, and makes proclamation that no slave is to enter, either male or female.'

556. semina tosta] See ii. 628 ; iii. 853. Hanc is the slave, whose name, according to Plutarch, was Antiphera. Illa is Ino ; but the sense is, 'comperit ex hac serva semina tosta ab illa dari.'

559. pro stirpe sua] Plutarch, Q. R. § 17. 'Why, in the presence of this goddess, do they pray for blessings, not upon their own children, but on nephews and nieces? Is it because she showed affection for her sister, and brought up her infant child Bacchus, while she was unfortunate with respect to her own son? Or generally, because the custom is a good one, and promotes kindly feelings among relations?'—'Both Leucothea and Mater Matuta were probably identical with Εὐλαίθωια, Lucina, the divinity who brought children from the darkness of the womb into the light of life.' Varronianus, p. 148. 569. auctorque locusque.] 'Idem Servius, qui Matutae templum dedit, tibi quoque eodem loco, in Foro Boario, eodemque die aedem dedicavit.' Gierig. 'The site of this temple is not exactly known; but it seems highly probable that it was the ancient temple, some of whose columns are built into the wall of the old church of Sta Maria in Cosmedin.' Keightley. What is known of its history has been collected by Merkel, p. cxl., who maintains that this Fortuna never had any distinctive epithet. May it not, however, have been the 'Fortuna Brevis,' or 'Lesser Fortune,' which Plutarch, Q. R. § 74, states that Servius Tullius consecrated? The Fors Fortuna of v. 773 must not be confounded with this.

570. togis?] The statue of Servius, which is mentioned by Pliny, viii. 48, was clad in two togas:—'Servii Tullii praetextae, quibus signum Fortunae ab eo dicatae coopertum erat, duravere ad Sejani exitum, mirumque fuit nec defluxisse eas nec teredinum injurias sensisse annis DLX.'

572. dubium mentis] Virg. Georg. iii. 289: 'Nec sum animi dubius, verbis ea vincere magnum Quam sit.'

573. profitetur] See on iv. 865. Plutarch, Q. R. § 36: Σέρβιος ὁ βασιλεὺς εὐτυχεστάτος γενομένος, δόξαν ἔσχε τῆ Τύχῃ συνεῖναι φοιτῶσῃ διὰ θυρίδος πρὸς αὐτόν. The ambiguity of συνεῖναι, or κορ-sortem esse Fortunae, may well have given rise to this story of the amour, as Gierig observes.

577. Nocte] This refers to timide and pudet, supra. The action was one of shame and concealment; and for this reason she veiled the king's face in two togas, as his statue is still veiled. — domum. A small chapel called by Plutarch Τύχης θάλαμος and δωμάτιον, which seems to have had either a small door, festra (fenestra), or literally a window, and from which a city gate was called 'Porta Fenestella.' Merkel, p. cliii., infers that the goddess herself was named Fortuna Fenestella, of which there does not appear to be any evidence. Nothing whatever is known of the city gate of this name, though Ovid speaks of it as still existing.

581. plebem] See inf. 781.

583. imagine] 'By his likeness,' or statue; but with an allusion to the imagines, on which see i. 591.

586. intus agemus] A metaphor from turning round the meta in the races of the circus — adductos, 'kept close up,' not allowed to take a wider range.

589. caede sororis.] Tullia, the younger daughter of Servius Tullius, had married Aruns, younger son of Tarquinius Priscus, her elder sister being united to the elder son, Lucius Tarquinius. Their dispositions being ill assorted, the wife of Aruns put her husband to death, and persuaded Lucius not only to murder his wife, but to add the crime of parricide, and seize the kingdom. See Livy i. 46—48.—pia vita, pietatem in patrem exercere. This is said in contempt.

593. facio dotale] 'The dowry I place in your hands is the life and the supreme authority of my father. It is for you to realize it.' In other words, the dowry is a kingdom, the condition on which it is brought the murder of the king.

596. nostras] She implies her willingness to share the responsibility of the guilt.

603. carpento] See on i. 618.

607. pretium amarum ?] 'A reward to your own cost,' i. e. δῶρον ἄδωρον, no reward but a punishment. This is a common use of amarus, like πικρός.

609. Sceleratus] The street so called seems to have retained its name in Ovid's time. All that is known of its site is, that it was between the Vicus Cyprius and the Esquiline. Varro, L. L. v. § 159 : 'Vicus Cyprius a cypro, quod ibi Sabini cives additi consederunt, qui a bono omine id appellarunt; nam cyprum Sabine bonum. Prope hunc vicus Sceleratus, dictus a Tullia Tarquini Superbi uxore, quod ibi quom jaceret pater occisus, supra cum carpentum mulio ut inigeret jussit.' Merkel, p. cxlvi., thinks it was the same as the Orbius, Urbius, or Virbius vicus, mentioned by Livy, i. 48, and that the name (Virbius) implies a confusion between the fate of Hippolytus (iii. 265; inf. 756), and that of Servius.

611. templum,] sc. Fortunae, founded by her father.

613. sub imagine] 'In the likeness of.'

620. pudoris] Womanly modesty, as opposed to the shameless conduct of Tullia. For to uncover the face of the statue was to imply that such conduct was no longer fitted to excite horror.

622. voce movere preces;] The antithesis implied is, 'non manu movere vestes.' Merkel gives ora

- Parcite, matronae, vetitas attingere vestes ; from a single MS. Two others have ore.

623. amictu,] This word, though a general term, is here applied to the toga, and is identical with vestes, v. 621. See on Propert. iv. 15. 3, where 'praetextae amictu' occurs, though in a verse of doubtful reading. In other cases, where vestis and amictus are contrasted, the former means the tunic, the latter the toga (i. 79). Tibull. i. 8. 13: 'frustra jam vestes, frustra mutantur amictus.' Amictus is for am (ἀμφι) jectus, or rather, the participle of a new form of this compound of jacio, amicire, and is properly τὸ ἀμφιβεβλημένον. — septimus. 'Ut Tatius annumeretur regibus Romanis.' Gierig.

625. Arserat] 'Anno v. c. 541, Liv. 24. 47, Dion. Hal. 4. 40; sed restitui coepit proximo anno, Liv. 35. 40.' Merkel, p. cxl.

628. Corniculana] Of Corniculum, a town in Latium, taken by the Romans; whence she is called captiva, v. 633.

630. ornatum] instructum, rite paratum. Tanaquil, the wife of Tarquinius Priscus, being skilled in Etruscan arts, seems to have done this with especial view to the supernatural birth which resulted. There is evidently some mysterious connection between the Lar or Genius, the focus and Vulcan. According to another account, which can hardly be reconciled with this, Tanaquil secured the throne for Servius after the murder of Tarquin.

633. loco sedet.] 'Sits down in the place prescribed by Tanaquil.' Most MSS. give foco, to which there is no other objection than the physical difficulty of sitting on hot ashes. Gierig reads loco captiva foetet, to which he attaches a strange interpretation.

636. flammeus apex.] The electric light or spark which is sometimes seen proceeding from hair or other parts of the body, was always considered as a proof of divine favour. See Virg. Aen. ii. 682:—

'Ecce levis summo de vertice visus
 Iuli
 Fundere lumen apex, tactuque innoxia molles Lambere flamma comas, et circum tempora pasci.'

the origin of the nimbus or glory round the head of saints in pictures. In reference to Servius when a boy, Livy relates the above phenomenon, i. 39.

637. Concordia] See i. 639. This temple was built by, or rather perhaps in the name of, Livia, wife of Augustus, in the piazza or covered promenade which bore her name. The latter was begun in 739 (Merkel, p. cxli.), and must have been finished before Ovid wrote the Ars Amatoria, in which it is mentioned, i. 71:—

‘Nec tibi vitetur, quae priscis sparsa tabellis
Porticus auctoris Livia nomen habet.’

This is thought to have been about B. C. 2. The site of the piazza was a splendid house bequeathed to Augustus by Vedius Pollio, a Roman knight, on condition, it is said, that some public work should be erected to perpetuate the memory of the donor.

643. sub crimine regni,] See sup.

189. It was not pulled down because the owner was suspected of aiming at supreme power, but because it was too magnificent for a private citizen. Such at least was the pretext.

647. censura] The office of Censor, borne by Augustus.—vindex, ‘he who has the power of punishing.’ Caesar himself was certainly a very temperate man, and set a fair example to the wealthy of Rome, if we may trust Suetonius, Oct. § 76—78. Our poet elsewhere pays him a compliment on this head, Trist. ii. l. 233:—

‘Urbs quoque te et legum lasset

esse tuis.’

649. Nulla nota est] See on iii. 429.—Jovi. ‘Idibus Jun., fortassis anno v. c. 560, Liv. 35, 41, Jovis aedes dedicata est, quem Invicti cognomen habuisse negat Neapolis contra diserta Ciceronis de Legg. 2. 11, et Augustini de civ. d. 5. 11 init. testimonia.’ Merkel, p. cxli.

665

Exilium quodam tempore Tibur erat.

651. Quinquatrus] The greater feast of this name occurred in March (iii. 809). Varro, L. L. vi. § 17 : ‘Quinquatrus Minusculae dictae Juniae Idus ab similitudine Majorum, quod tibicines tum feriatī vagantur per urbem et conveniunt ad aedem Minervae.’ The tubilistrum was on the last day of the greater festival, iii. 849, as in this case the tibia was played through the city.

654. toga longa,] The palla, the dress of citharoedi, and perhaps of musicians generally. See ii. 107. Plutarch, who tells this story precisely in the same manner as Ovid, except that he makes the day the Ides of January, has ἰσθητάς γυναικείας φοροῦντας, Quaest. Rom. § 55. This gives probability to the reading of a few MSS., stola longa. Hor. Ars. Poet. 214 :—

addidit arti

Tibicen, traxitque vagus per pulpita vestem.’

660. funeribus.] Not only at sacrifices, marriages, and in processions was the tibia used, but also at funerals, in addition to the more noisy horns and trumpets (cornua et tubae). See Becker, Gullus, p. 511, who adds, that the number of tibicines in the latter case was limited to ten by the XII Tables. The use, as appears from v. 668, was as an accompaniment to the dirge, naenius. In some passages the tibia of the marriage and the tuba of the funeral are contrasted. See Propert. ii. 7. 12 : ‘tibia, funesta tristior illa tuba,’ and Her. xii. 140.

661. mercede] The privileges attached to the office: not only the pay, but the right of dining in the temple of Jupiter, the discontinuing of which, by the authority of the Censors, was one cause of the secession to Tibur. See Livy ix. 30.—Graiae artis, i.e. that of αὐληταί, though the Italian tibia probably had an independent origin.

663. Adde quod, &c.] A second cause of offence. They were piqued at their numbers being limited by authority. The aedile is thought to have been Appius Claudius, A. U. C. 440, who however, as Gierig suggests, probably only enforced the law of the XII Tables.

666. Exilium, &c.] ‘Time was, when removal to the neighbouring and delightful town of Tivoli was all that exile implied.’ The poet might be thought to have had in view his own banishment among the Getae. See however on i. 3.

668. Quaeritur] 'is missed,' desideratur. Georg. iii. 532: 'quaesitas ad sacra boves Junonis,' i. e. deficientes, non suppetentes.—scena and aris correspond to ludis and fanis, supra 659. Both Livy and Plutarch mention the religious scruple that was felt in the absence of tibicines from sacrifices, and state that this was the object of their recal; upon the failure of which recourse was had to stratagem.—toros, the biers; more properly lectos.

669. Servierat, &c.] 'There was a man at Tibur who had been a slave, but long ago manumitted, and at that time of a character and reputation which would have befitted any rank.' Plutarch calls him ἀπελευθέρως, libertinus.

676. vindictae] i. e. libertatis. Persius v. 88: 'vindicta postquam meus a praetore recessi.' The wand by which the slave was struck at the ceremony of manumission, and the probable origin of a similar form in conferring knighthood.

679. dominus,] This might seem to mean the patronus, or 'auctor vindictae;' but Plutarch's narrative makes it probable that the master of the feast is intended.—sirpea. Varro, L. L. v. § 139: 'sirpea, quod virgis sirpatur, id est colligando implicatur, in qua stercus aliudve quid vehitur.' The word is from scirpus, a sort of rush, and appears to mean a kind of hamper, perhaps with a cover to it.

685. Plautius,] This is a conjectural reading, the MSS. giving callidus, except three or four of inferior note, which have Claudius. The colleague of Appius Claudius is supposed to be meant. Cf. ver. 690. Claudius himself, the author of their banishment, or rather, the cause of their secession, would be less likely to bring about their return than the other.

687. tibicina] For tibicinae. Plutarch, l. 1.: καὶ γύναϊα παρῆν ἄμα τῷ πότῳ. As most of the party, in their Tivoli revel, had been so dressed, the admixture of a few female flute players, to whom the dress was natural and appropriate, would serve to divert attention from the masquerade.

690. Contra jussa] From this it appears, as Keightley observes, that the secession was not wholly a voluntary one, as Livy and Plutarch represent it.

691. licet] concessum est. ἐνομισθη, Plutarch; 'datum,' Livy, ut sup.

The answer is this: 'Because a similar festival is held in March, in which the arts of which I am the patroness are represented, and among these arts is that of the tibicen, which is equally deserving of celebration.'—sub inventis, 'subject to, under the influence of, my contrivances.'

'When the sun has set in the west, and the mild star (Hesperus or Lucifer, sup. 211) shall be going its course round the heavens, Orion will be seen to rise.' This rising was in the morning, which the poet expresses by saying it is when the sun is under the earth, i. e. before it re-appears or emerges from the east. After this verse the MSS. and edd. insert the distich which has already occurred iii. 401, 402.

729. tua nurus,] Aurora, wife of Tithonus, the son of Laomedon.

731. Summano] Though Varro, L. L. v. § 74, says that this deity was one of those to whom Titus Tatius dedicated altars, and adduces the authority of the Annals for the assertion, Summanus is generally considered an Etruscan god. 'He was the god of nightly thunders. The usual etymology is summus manium; but there is little reason for supposing that it is an ordinary Latin word. As Arnobius considers him identical with Pluto, it seems reasonable to conclude that he was simply the Jupiter Infernus; and as the Dispater of the Tuscans was called Mantus, and his wife Mania, we may conjecture that Sub-manus was perhaps in Tuscan Zuv-manus or Jupiter-bonus, which is the common euphemism in speaking of the infernal deities. The connexion between the nightly thunders, which the ancients so greatly feared, and the χθόνια βρονταί, is obvious.' Varronianus, p. 144. Perhaps the same kind of religious reserve is implied by Ovid's quisquis is est. Compare Ζεὺς ὄστις ποτ' ἔστιν, Aesch. Ag. 105. The rumblings which precede or attend earthquakes have ever been, and are, the subjects of excessive alarm. Merkel's conjecture, p. ccviii., that the name is connected with mane, 'the god of morning,' for 'the nightly god,' proceeds on the same supposition. The date given by Ovid for the consecration of the temple, though indefinite, seems the only one recorded. (Merkel, p. cxlii.)

739, 740.] This distich is omitted by Merkel, being found only in five inferior MSS. It was perhaps added to supply an evident omission in the narrative. The repetition of pío juveni in ver. 747 is scarcely Ovidian.

746. Coronides,] Son of Apollo and the nymph Coronis, or, as Apollodoros says, l. l., Arsinoe, adding, however, τινὲς δὲ Ἀσκληπιῶν οὐκ ἔξ Ἀρσινόης τῆς Λευκίππου λέγουσιν, ἀλλ' ἐκ Κορωνίδος τῆς Φλεγύου ἐν Θεσσαλίᾳ. See sup. i. 291.

750. Glauci Manibus] 'The dead

Glaucus,' who was restored to life by the seer Polyidus, by using a certain herb which he had observed a snake apply to the body of another. The legend is given by Apollodoros, iii. 3. 1, 2.

751, 752.] In the MSS. (with one exception, and that of no note) the vulgate reading is found, augur descendit. Merkel gives anguis descendit, and ad umbras from inferior copies, which he explains (p. xciv.) cadaver. In the pentameter he edits augur ab angue dato, likewise from a single MS. We have restored the old reading, which appears to be unobjectionable. Observatas, in fact, will best apply to the seer Polyidus, who had watched the action of the snake.—descendit perhaps implies that he had seen the snakes from an elevated position, and then had gone down to look for the herbs.

755. nemoris] sc. Aricia, where Diana was worshipped. See iii. 263, seqq. The lacus here mentioned in connexion with it is the crater-lake, or tarn, Lago di Nemi, anciently Nemorensis, from its contiguity to the grove.

757. Clymenus] This appears to be the title of Pluto, borrowed from the Argive town of Hermione. See Merkel, p. ccxii., who refers to Pausan. 2. 35. 10: ὀπισθεν δὲ τοῦ ναοῦ τῆς χθονίας χωρία ἐστίν, ἃ καλοῦσιν Ἐρμιονεῖς τὸ μὲν Κλυμένου τὸ δὲ Πλούτωνος. He thinks that the Greek worship of Diana as Dictynna, and of her hero Hippolytus, was brought into Italy by the Troezenians, who founded Sybaris and Paestum: 'Virbius habitus est pro Hippolyto non quia ulla in re, nisi forte de nomine in Osca lingua suspicari lubeat, similis illi fuerit, sed quia similis est conjunctio in graecis urbibus Dianae et herois.' The name Virbius, which some have absurdly explained vir bis, if not shortened from Hippolytus, which Merkel thinks possible, comparing Vibo from Hipponium, must be referred to some Italian dialect. Virgil, who gives the legend Aen. vii. 761—780, introduces the nymph Egeria in the worship of the Aricine Diana. See sup.

In his original and Homeric character, Aesculapius appears only as a mortal and a skillful physician.

765. Flaminius] See Livy xxii. 1—3. The Romans, under the consul Caius Flaminius, were defeated at the Trasimene lake (Lago di Perugia) B. c. 217, by Hannibal. It was said that he had marched in disregard of the auspices. See Cic. de Div. I. xxxv. 77: 'Quo tempore, quum signifer primi hastati signum non posset movere loco, nec quidquam proficeretur, plures quum accederent, Flaminius, re nuntiata, more suo neglexit. Itaque tribus horis concisus exercitus, atque ipse interfectus est.'—per volucres. He had just before ridiculed the warnings of the pullarius.

ipse, if not the laws of the language, should have shown that this is erroneous. Suis is reflexive. Hasdrubal the son of Gisco is here meant, for he and Syphax were defeated by the combined forces of Masinissa and Scipio, B. C. 204. — sua tela are therefore his country's arms turned against himself. Gierig is wrong in supposing the brother of Hannibal is meant, who fell in 207, at the battle of the Metaurus.

773. Fortunae Fortis] Fors Fortuna is to be distinguished from the Fortuna of v. 569 supra. The epithet involves a repetition of the name, like Anna Perenna, and is probably for Vorts; compare Vertumnus, and see on Propert. v. (iv.) 2. 1. Hence in the ablative forte is 'by chance,' casu. Keightley, after Lobeck, takes fors as a contraction of fortis, and explains it bona. Plutarch and Dionysius, who render it ἀνδρεία or ἰσχυρὰ Τύχη, evidently supposed it was the adjective fortis, 'strong.' The temple was on the other side of the Tiber, and like that of the other Fortuna, was dedicated by Servius Tullius, as both Ovid and Varro attest, L. L. vi. § 17: 'dies Fortis Fortunae appellatus ab Servio Tullio Rege, quod is fanum Fortis Fortunae secundum Tiberim extra urbem Romam dedicavit Junio mense.' To its position across the river, the words 'celeri decurrite cymba' clearly refer; and it may be added, 'decurrite' implies that it was down the Tiber.—pars pede, &c. means that some cross the bridges and run along the opposite bank. From what follows, it is clear that the festivities on this day were chiefly aquatic.

781. de plebe] Gierig thinks this passage inconsistent with the origin ascribed to Servius, supra 633. But his mother Oeresia was at least captiva, and therefore serva, v. 627. The story of Fortune having favoured him, v. 573, is also in conformity with his supposed humble birth, which, however, Livy denies, i. 39. But see Varronianus, p. 22.

784. dubiae deae.] 'The capricious goddess' who can change slaves into kings, and who 'hinc apicem rapax sustulit, hic posuisse gaudet,' Hor. Od. i. 34. 14: 'praesens imo

787. Zona] The belt of Orion, who is called 'ensifer,' iv. 388. Keightley says the evening rising is here meant, whereas he rises in the morning. The poet however does not specify the time, but only the day of the month.

791. Lares] The Lares Praestites (v. 129), besides the altar there mentioned, had a chapel on the Via Sacra built by Augustus. To this Tacitus is thought to allude in his important account of the ancient pomaerium, Ann. xii. 23: 'ad aram Consi, mox curias veteres, tum ad sacellum Larum,' which Ritter understands of the 'gemini Lares qui compita servant,' ii. 616, the same, in fact, as the Praestites. The site of the chapel is inferred from the mention of the garland-sellers, who are supposed to have resided in the fruit market at the top of the Via Sacra. Suet. Oct. § 31: 'Compitales Lares ornare bis in anno instituit, vernis floribus et aestivis.' See Merkel, p. cxxiii., who adds: 'Carmen Ovidianum hac parte imperfectum puto, cum tam insigne tamque tractabile principis factum tam exiliter annotetur.'

793. Tempus idem aedis] A temple of Jupiter Stator was dedicated on the same day as the preceding. It had been vowed by Romulus in his war with the Sabines, Livy i. 12. The site was near the Porta Mugionis, on the Via Sacra, where the ascent of the Palatine commenced. Trist. iii. l. 31:—

'Inde petens dextram, Porta est, ait, ista Palati:

Hic stator, hoc primum condita
Roma loco est.'

—ora jugi, i. e. frontem.

796. trabeae tuae.] See i. 37. Of two if not three temples to Quirinus, one of which is mentioned in ii. 511, that here alluded to, as Merkel thinks, p. cxliv., is the one which was dedicated by L. Papirius Cursor in 461 (Livy x. 46), destroyed by fire in 705, and restored in 709. The site is not recorded.

797. Iuleis] We may infer from this word that Ovid derived the name of the following month, more commonly called quintilis, from Iulus, if he ever finished the poem. The meaning is, 'to-morrow is the first of July,' for 'this is the last day of June.'—summa means perhaps nothing more than that another month is concluded. But it is open to another interpretation, 'bring now to a close a work I had vainly hoped to complete.'

800. dedit manus.] See iii. 688. —noverca, Juno, who was reluctantly compelled to admit Hercules to divine honours. The temple here mentioned was called 'Hercules Musarum,' dedicated A. U. 575 by Fulvius Nobilior the Censor, and restored by Marcius Philippus, the step-father of Augustus. Suet. Oct. § 29: 'Multaque a multis exstructa sunt: sicut a Marcio Philippo aedes Herculis Musarum,' &c. Pliny 35, 36. 4, relates that Fulvius Nobilior brought statues of the Muses from Ambracia, and placed them in the temple of Hercules, whence the origin of the name; for there appears to be nothing in common in the cultus of these divinities. Suetonius does not expressly say that the temple was restored by Marcius Philippus: he says exstructa, and Merkel, p. cxlv., is of opinion that the historian is in error, for the 'porticus Philippi,' mentioned by Martial, v. 49. 13, was probably built as an addition to the temple, not by Philippus, but by either Octavian or Octavia in honour of that person, together with the Porticus Octaviae, commenced in 721.

802. Marcia casta] This was the wife of Fabius Maximus. Tac. Ann. i. 5: 'Quippe rumor incesserat, paucos ante menses Augustum, electis consciis et comite uno Fabio Maximo, Planasiam vectum ad visendum Agrippam; multas illic utrimque lacrymas et signa caritatis, spemque ex eo fore ut juvenis penatibus avi redderetur. Quod Maximum uxori Marciae aperuisse, illam Liviae. Gnarum id Caesari; neque multo post extincto Maximo, dubium an quaesita morte, auditos in funere ejus Marciae gemitus semet incusantis, quod causa exitii marito fuisset.' This was in 767, and Merkel remarks, p. cclxix., that the praises of Marcia which follow are scarcely applicable to a widow. Hence he infers that the present book was not revised by the author, as was the first book, in 770. The poet's own wife was called Marcia, and was of the same family. To her the Epistle ex Pont. iii. 1, is addressed, and she is mentioned by name in ver. 78. See also ex Pont. i. 2. 138—140, where he speaks of himself as related by marriage to Fabius Maximus. She was his third wife, Trist. iv. 10. 73, and as he speaks of her with great affection, it is clear he indirectly commemorates her in this passage.

803. sacrificio Anco.] The word is a kind of play on 'rex Sacrificus' (ii. 21), which is here for 'auctori sacrorum,' because Ancus Marcius religiously observed the institutions of Numa, Livy i. 32. On the ablative nobilitate see iv. 306, where impar in like manner stands for minor, as par is for non minor.

805, 806.] This distich merely repeats the sentiment of the preceding verse, and is one of the proofs of hurried composition which may be detected in this part of the work.

Nec, quod laudamus formam, tam turpe putaris ;

Laudamus magnas hac quoque parte deas.

Nupta fuit quondam matertera Caesaris illi.

O decus, o sacra femina digna domo !

810

Sic cecinit Clio : doctae assensere sorores.

Annuit Alcides, increpuitque lyra.

809. matertera Caesaris] The aunt of Augustus was married to the Marcus Philippus mentioned above. Suetonius, Oct. § 8, calls 'Marcus Philippus consularis' the vitricus (step-father) of Augustus. Hence Keightley infers that there were two of this name. This does not seem likely : nor is it more probable that the word vitricus bore a somewhat extended sense. It may however be remarked that Nicolas of Damascus, in his life of Caesar, gives the name Φίλιππος Λεύκιος (Lucius Philippus), and says that the young Octavian was brought up by him and his own mother Antia ὡς παρὰ πατρί.

812. lyra.] Thus (not lyram) all the good copies. The meaning is, he struck some notes on his lyre expressive of assent. The statue of Hercules with a lyre seems to have stood in the same temple with the Muses. It is very remarkable that in three or four of the inferior MSS. four verses, apparently genuine, of the commencement of Lib. vii. are preserved. But Merkel quotes a note of J. F. Gronovius, 'Nori-bergae vidi antiquam editionem cui ascriptum erat : Reliqui sex libri servantur apud presbyterum in pago prope Ulmam,' adding the two first verses, which however are different from those given in the above MSS., and yet have an equal claim to be genuine. Is it then possible that the remainder of the poem till lately existed? That the twelve books were actually written seems all but certain from Trist. ii. 549 :—

'Sex ego Fastorum scripsi totidem-que libellos,

Cumque suo finem mense volumen habet.'

where 'sex totidemque' may be compared with vi. 725. Merkel seems justified in supporting this interpretation (p. cclvi.) against others who have contended that only six books were written. See on i. 3.

III.

J. CAESARIS COMMENTARII DE BELLO GALLICO.

With Notes, Preface, Introduction, &c.

By GEORGE LONG, Esq., M.A.

Price 5s. 6d. cloth.

“Mr. Long’s name stands deservedly so high, that those who feel any interest in a work like this will need nothing more than the above brief announcement to assure them that we are likely to have here an edition of Cæsar surpassing and superseding any one that has previously appeared in this country. Mr. Long’s connexion with the work is something more than nominal. It is a bonâ fide production of his hand,—not a mere make-up from foreign and other sources, labelled with his name. From first to last it bears the impress of his vigorous and well-stored mind. We scarcely know which more to admire, the ability with which important matters are handled, or the honest pains-taking care which has been bestowed on the minutest points,—points which, though essential to accuracy, many an editor would consider beneath his notice. In the preparation of the text, Mr. Long—without compromising his own independence of mind—has availed himself of the labours of Schneider, Elberling, Herzog, Oudendorp, Clarke, Oberlin, and others. The preface contains some judicious remarks on Cæsar and his Commentaries. It is followed by an introduction intended to give to both teachers and students correct ideas of the physical character and previous history of Gallia. The notes are all that could be desired; containing valuable critical observations on various readings, explanations of difficulties, an abundance of grammatical information, illustrations from other authors, and whatever geographical, historical, and archæological knowledge is necessary for the complete elucidation of the text. And, what is often wanting in such works, there is a vein of strong sense—the very reverse of twaddling pedantry—running through the whole, and displaying itself in the manly simplicity, and force of the style. The healthy moral tone in which Mr. LONG writes—his freedom from every approach to affectation, and his frank confession of difficulty—are calculated to confer scarcely less benefit on the youthful reader, than the vast amount of knowledge contained in these pages.”—Athenæum.

IV.

QUINTI HORATII FLACCI OPERA OMNIA.

With English Notes,

BY THE REV. A. J. MACLEANE, M.A.

HEAD MASTER OF KING EDWARD'S SCHOOL, BATH.

Abridged from the larger edition in the “BIBLIOTHECA CLASSICA.”

Price 6s. 6d. cloth.

“An abridged or rather a recast edition of Mr. Macleane's larger edition of Horace. This volume is designed for schools, and contains the broadest features of the previous edition, intended for deeper and more refined study than school-boys will or perhaps can give. So far as regards the object of the poet, the scope of particular pieces, or the explanation of particular passages, this cheaper edition leaves nothing to be desired, as respects the understanding of Horace.”—Spectator, Sept. 10, 1853.

The Heliacal rising of a star is when, after being in conjunction with it and invisible, it emerges from the light so as to be visible in the morning before sun-rising.

The Heliacal setting of a star is when the Sun approaches so near as to render it invisible by its superior splendour.

A star rises or sets conicly, when it rises or sets with the Sun.

A star rises acronically (areo) when it rises at sunset.
 sets _____
 when it sets at sunrise.

PL. 582 - 200.
It was during the interval between the war against the Cantabri and the Dalmatian Expedition of Tiberius, that Augustus closed the Temple of Janus. This temple had been closed only twice during the whole period of Rome's exist-ence - once in the mythical age under Numa, - and the second time, after the first Punic war, in the consulship of Titus Manlius Torquatus (517.). Augustus is said to have closed it three times in his reign; but this may be merely an inconsiderate statement of Suetonius. Neilande
